INDIA OFFICE,
1*st August* 1868.

The following further Despatch has been received from Lieutenant General the Lord Napier of Magdala, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., lately commanding the Abyssinian Expeditionary Force:—

From Sir ROBERT NAPIER, to the Military Secretary, India Office.

PARIS,
1*st July* 1868.

SIR,—I have the honour to forward, for submission to the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India, the report of Lieutenant Colonel Warden, Director of the Transport Corps in Abyssinia, with a report attached from Captain Hand, Sub-Director, Transport Corps, on the Highlands.

ENCLOSURE No. 1.

Report on the Transport Train, Abyssinian Expeditionary Force, by Lieutenant Colonel R. WARDEN, Bombay Staff Corps.

This train was organized under the orders of the Bombay Government in August 1867, and Lieutenant Colonel R. Warden was appointed Director to organize the same, under the orders of the Commissary General of the Army.

2. The establishment for every 2,000 animals was laid down by Government Resolution, No. 144*a* of the 28th September 1867 at the strength as below* for 14 divisions in the train, and which, with the Commissariat, was placed under the orders of Lieutenant Colonel W. H. Holland, Controller of Supply and Transport, Abyssinian Expeditionary Force.

3. At the first starting, the sole work of organization fell upon the Director, without a second in command, staff, or any officer to assist him.

* 1 Captain, 2 Subalterns, 4 Chief Inspectors, 8 Second Inspectors, 2 Weighing men, 16 Head Muccadums, 80 Second Muccadums, 1 Man to 2 Mules, 4 Boogaries.

4. The duty of supervision devolved at first on the inspectors and head muccadums, consisting chiefly of civilians, i.e., persons who may have been or were then attached to the Commissariat, Railway, and similar departments. Among the muleteers and muccadums, a few were collected who had belonged to the field column carriage under the Commissariat; the rest were the off-scouring of the Bombay streets, consisting of broken-down native tradesmen, discharged Europeans and Eurasians from other departments, and the class termed "loafers."

5. Prior to their embarkation, the first detachment that proceeded with the advanced brigade, strength as below,* was inspected by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in Bombay, who expressed himself as under the gravest apprehension in regard to the stability of a transport founded upon such a nucleus, and on the 15th of October 1867, a military organization was sanctioned approaching very nearly to the first scheme, as laid down by the Director in his report, dated 15th August 1867.

6. On the 4th November 1867, a second detachment of the transport train was despatched to Abyssinia, strength as below.†

7. The change in the organization of the corps by the order of the 15th October 1867 was as follows:—

Four head inspectors to be European non-commissioned officers of good character, and able to read, write, and keep accounts, and of some education.

Four second inspectors (two European and two native non-commissioned officers); they were also required to be equally efficient.

Ten third class (half European and half native), the latter to be able to keep accounts in the vernacular; and Twenty fourth class (all native) to be drawn from native regiments.

8. On this circulars were issued to officers commanding Her Majesty's British and Native Regiments of Artillery, Cavalry, and Infantry to collect good intelligent men for this work, and the following numbers were received:—

9. This supervision was found, however, by experience when the work actually commenced in Abyssinia, to be still inadequate, and His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief therefore increased the same by attaching 37 men from the 3rd Regiment Native Infantry in Abyssinia.

10. It may be added that the 14 divisions of the transport train now included the Lahore and Rawul Pindee Trains.

11. The proportion of men to animals, i. e., mules and camels, was fixed at one to three, but as it will be shown hereafter, the difficulties were so great that it became self-evident such a proportion could not answer, and in the advance of the army on Magdala, every mule had one man, either a soldier or muleteer, to look after it.

12. The establishment of officers of one captain and two subalterns to a division of 2,000 animals was found to be equally inadequate, for it became necessary that an officer should accompany every convoy, also one at each post to superintend the passing and returning of convoys with regularity and order, to supervise the feeding and watering of the animals—the latter under the circumstances a most important duty, and as in most places the supply of water was such as to require the greatest care in distribution.

13. Again, at the larger stations, such as Koomaylee, Senafe, Antalo, &c., officers were placed in command with staff officers to assist them.

14. As may be imagined, these appointments drew away a considerable number of officers from the original strength, and His Excellency therefore drafted in a large number of officers as subalterns to be attached to the several divisions, so that there might be a better supervision over the men and their animals, which is so necessary to the well-being of a transport.

15. On the 5th December 1867, a second in command and staff officer were appointed, and on the arrival of the head quarters in Abyssinia, the Director for the first time was allowed a paymaster and quartermaster.

16. The paymaster was a most important post and has been well and ably filled by Lieutenant Clark, Madras Cavalry; but it would have been better had this appointment been sanctioned in the first instance, instead of throwing this duty upon captains of divisions, assisted by a subaltern, with one or two of their head inspectors to assist.

17. This arrangement, as soon as the working of the campaign really commenced, broke down altogether, for it was found that the out-door duties were such as to require the presence of every officer and non-commissioned officer day and night, and His Excellency then ordered that non-commissioned officers from each British regiment in the force should be detached as pay clerks to each division, but the full number, 14, could never be obtained.

18. As the army advanced, and the distance from the base of operations, where the head quarters of the Director was established, became so great, 4 out of the 14 divisions comprising the transport train were formed into what was termed a Highland Train, in contradistinction to the remaining 10 divisions, which were called the Lowland Train; Captain Hand, 82nd Foot, being appointed to the command of the former, and his report upon train is herewith annexed.

19. In addition to the establishment of officers, inspectors, and muleteers, artificers, as below,* were attached to each division of 2,000 animals.

20. The strength of the corps under the command of the Director finally reached the gigantic proportions shown at the close of the campaign, viz.:—

80 Commissioned officers.
160 European inspectors.
400 Native inspectors.
12,000 Followers.

21. The organization of the train was much affected by a change in the class of muleteers, for,

* 1 Captain: Civilians, 4 Head Inspectors, 4 Second Inspectors, 20 Head Muccadums, 80 Second Muccadums, 351 Drivers, 54 Artificers, 392 Mules collected from Nuggur, Malliguam, Poona, and Calcutta; 18 Tattoos, Poona.

† 2 Subalterns, 2 European Inspectors, 125 Drivers, 42 Artificers, 140 Draught Bullocks, 126 Carts.

* 1 Head Smith, 8 Smiths, 1 Head Carpenter, 6 Carpenters, 1 Head Moochie, 10 Moochies, 8 Bellows Boys, 8 Hammermen.

besides those sent from Bombay at the commencement, a very large number of muleteers, or beheved to be such, were sent from Suez.

22. They consisted of every European nationality, besides Turks and Egyptians, and the interpreters were very few in proportion, many among these were so open to bribery and corruption that the correctness of their interpretation had had to be purchased by the men.

23. The wanton barbarous cruelty of these men to their animals, their unwillingness to work or to bear privations, beside being insubordinate in the extreme, led to their being discharged, and during the months of January, February, and March, 2,100 were sent back.

24. They were replaced by some 5,000 men collected from the "Punjab," who answered admirably, and without which the train could not possibly have worked.

They had great endurance, were very willing and tractable, and once they knew what was required of them worked both cheerfully and well.

25. The organization of the transport train, with the changes that occurred in the same, having been shown, the working of the train next comes into consideration, which commenced with the arrival of Captain Griffith and Lieutenants Mortimer and Hennell, with the advance brigade. The officers were followed by Captain Young and Lieutenants Sturt and Onslow and Captain Waring followed with Lieutenant Caldecott and Cornet Lucas.

26. The train was divided into divisions as follows :—

A. Mules,	H. Camels,
B. Pack Bullocks,	K. Ditto,
C. Carts,	L. Mules,
D. Mules,	M. Ditto (Lahore),
E. Ditto,	N. Ditto (Rawul Pindee),
F. Pack Bullocks,	O. Pack Bullocks,
G. Mules,	P. Camels, and Captains Griffith and Yonge commenced the formation of "A" and "E" Divisions, and Captain Waring "P" Division.

27. Difficulties and disasters met these officers at every step. Mules landed without equipments in hundreds, and with muleteers of the class already spoken of.

28. At that time these officers having no subordinates had to look to everything themselves, and this with the scarcity of water and forage combined led to a loss to the army at this critical period of an immense number of mules.

29. As regards the camels, these were procured by the contractors at Aden, and Mr. Houseman's language fails to describe the pitiable condition of these animals when landed. Some were too young for work, others with sore backs and ulcers frightful to behold, others so young, averaging from six months to one year, were utterly useless, and the majority landed in such a weak and debilitated condition that they could barely carry 100lbs. The proportion also of drivers to animals was so small that before long hundreds of these useful beasts were lost to the army.

30. The Director was detained in Bombay for work connected with the finance and equipment of the train by the Commissary General, and left Bombay on the 19th December 1867, arriving here on the 31st December 1867, only three days before His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

31. Besides the above-mentioned work at the Presidency, he was enabled to form two complete divisions of bullocks before his departure, viz., "B" and "F," which were detained for tonnage, and the last of the divisions did not arrive here till March 1868.

32. A short time previous to the departure of the Director, Captain Twentyman proceeded in command of the first detail of the military element, consisting of 26 European and 35 Native inspectors whose arrival was most welcome to the officers then organizing the "A," "E," and "P" Divisions, and Captain Twentyman himself commenced the formation of "D" Division. These two Divisions, "D" and "A", subsequently formed one-half of the Highland Brigade already alluded to.

33. The state of the transport on the arrival of the Director was truly appalling, for what with the wretched state of the animals, insubordination of the Suez muleteers, and the enormous pressure put on the train by the Commissariat and other departments, to meet the requirements of the army daily landing, success seemed hopeless, and but for the untiring energy and perseverance, and hard work day and night of the above-mentioned officers, the train must have been lost altogether.

34. However, day by day, a fresh and better class of animals were received, especially camels from Soakim and the interior. The Lahore and Rawul Pindee Mule Trains arrived. Muleteers from the Punjab came to be exchanged for Egyptians, Turks, &c., and matters began to assume a more hopeful aspect, although much remained to be done to render the train effective.

35. At Koomaylee a large depôt was established, which became the great point where stores and provisions were accumulated, and from thence passed on to the front. For some time it was the head quarters of seven divisions. Its command fell upon Major Nuttall, second in command, and the selection was a happy one.

36. The duties required of him were constant out-door supervision from morning till after midnight of the numerous convoys that had to start, and to his untiring energy must be attributed the great success and utility of this depôt.

37. A similar post was established at Senafe, and the selection was again equally fortunate, and Captain Annesley worked so ably and successfully in the command of this important post that he received the highest encomiums from General Officers passing through.

38. The sub-officers placed at intermediate posts also did their duty well, and frequently called for the commendations of General Officers for the neatness and order of the several stations under their command.

39. Among the many and severe duties the officers had to perform, convoy duty was the hardest, and under which many who had so long borne the burden and heat of the day had at last to succumb.

40. It must be acknowledged that the losses have been very great, both of animals and stores, but under the then existing circumstances, it was literally beyond human control, the long marches (one especially of 32 miles) when the water supply at Undul wells was very limited, without any streams on the way-side at which men and animals could refresh themselves, they would arrive at night utterly prostrate with fatigue, and without any hope of rest until the animals had been unladen, watered, and fed, and this in a narrow crowded pass where only a few animals could be watered together, which took up a considerable time.

41. After this the men had to cook their own food, and they could barely lay down for rest and sleep, ere they were again called to load and resume their march.

42. This work of loading was in itself a very severe task for one man to load three unbroken and in many cases vicious animals, with no one to assist, was an impossibility, and when two or three combined together, the mules that were laden would either break from their pickets, throw off their burdens, or roll on the ground till they had released themselves.

43. Thus hours passed in simply loading and re-loading, and the sun was well up before the convoy commenced its march.

44. These convoys covered an immense length of space, often extending for two miles; and when animals laid down or dropped with fatigue, they had to be unladen, and the spare animals put into their places.

45. The percentage of spare animals was ten per cent., but when the pack bullocks came into use, they were so wild, so unbroken, and many of them in such wretched condition, that even twent-five per cent. was not enough.

46. As soon as the road between Zoulla and Senafe had become passable for wheeled carriage, the train was strengthened by a supply of Bombay bullocks and Maltese mule carts.

47. But for this timely assistance, it would have been sorely straitened, as mule carriage in the lowlands began to fail, and the supply of camels, which had for a while revived in quality and numbers, also began to diminish.

48. The first passage of carts up the Senafe Ghaut, consisting of a convoy of eighty carts, in sole charge of a native military inspector, was so successful that every effort was made to increase this kind of carriage. Captain L. A. M. Græme, 102nd Foot, was chosen to raise and organize the cart division, and his efforts were crowned with the utmost success, which he richly merited, as he devoted all his energies and time to this one work, seeing to everything himself, and his conduct is beyond all praise.

49. It must be here mentioned that, as the supply of draught mules had ceased, and those in use beginning to fail from hard work, with the sanction of the Controller of Supply and Transport, Captain Græme commenced converting mule carts with broken shafts into bullock carts with the ordinary Indian yoke.

50. This was a great success, as we were enabled to purchase a very fair supply of draught bullocks from the natives of the country, and thus had as many as 600 carts at a time available.

51. The Veterinary Department was a source of great anxiety, for, on leaving Bombay, the establishment was miserably small, and at no time has it been possible to increase it; but among the French and Italian muleteers, there were collected some eight or ten men who had some knowledge of the first principles of veterinary practice.

52. This was the utmost help that could be rendered to the veterinary surgeons, many of whom were young men recently entered the army, but who nevertheless, by energy and good-will, did good service.

53. These officers were under the immediate orders of First Class Veterinary Surgeon W. Lamb, whose services were indeed valuable, for his charge was something enormous, consisting of upwards of 30,000 animals, with only ten veterinary surgeons to assist him, who had frequently to perform extraordinary and unusual duties, having constantly to compound their own medicines, administer them, and attend individually to the washing and dressing of the animals in the sick lines for want of subordinates to assist them.

54. The Director would beg especially to bring to the notice of His Excellency the services of the Veterinary Surgeons Lamb and Anderson.

55. This latter officer had also great professional skill and experience, and the skill with which he speedily established a most useful sick depôt at the Pioneer wells, as also one at Koomaylee, each containing over 1,000 animals, deserves the highest praise.

56. As a general rule, the European and Military native inspectors answered my expectations, but, of course, among such a large number, amounting to—Europeans 160, Natives 440—it was to be expected that a certain proportion would fail; but it was found that, when really good men came from regiments, it was entirely owing to the selections made by the commanding officers, for when care was taken to select good and efficient men for this special service, they invariably turned out well, and showed wonderful examples of endurance and persevering energy when in charge of convoys, for this class of men in the train were frequently twenty-four hours without food, and a murmur of complaint I never heard.

57. Cavalry men, of course, are best suited for this work, and the train is much indebted to the officers commanding the 3rd Dragoon Guards, 11th Hussars, and Royal Artillery, in Bombay, for the careful selection of men they made for the transport train.

58. The pleasing task now remains of bringing to the special notice of His Excellency the names of such officers more especially deserving of his kind consideration, and whose efforts came under the personal observation of the Director, who from 1st to last never failed,—

Major Nuttall, 2nd in command,

Captain C. M. Griffith, Bombay Staff Corps,
" W. L. Twentyman, 18th Hussars,
" E. Boyle, 96th Foot,
" L. A. M. Græme, 102nd Foot,
" H. Waring, 2nd Foot,
" C. McInroy, Madras Staff Corps, who commanded the first divisions that were raised; and it is difficult to find language to express the extent and value of the assistance they afforded.

59. They were materially assisted by their subalterns,—

Lieutenant F. G. Mortimer, Royal Horse Artillery.

Lieutenant J. B. Hennell, Bombay Staff Corps.

Lieutenant T. T. Hodges, 76th Foot.
" W. S. Daniels, 105th Foot.
" H. W. Faulkner, 95th Foot.
" A. D. Strettell, 109th Foot.
" F. J. Caldecott, Royal Horse Artillery.
" D. du McGunton, 96th Foot.
" W. G. Gerard, Royal Artillery.

Cornet C. A. De N. Lucas, 2nd Dragoons.

60. To these are added the names of officers who, although not among the first to join, yet by the ability, energy, and zeal they brought to bear on their work, at once placed themselves on the same footing,—

Captain T. Kelly.
Lieutenant C. S. Sturt, Bombay Infantry.
" A. E. Pearse, 76th Foot.
" S. M. Onslow, Madras Cavalry.
" H. de P. Rennick, 21st Foot.

61. The Sub-Director has brought to the notice of His Excellency such officers as served immediately under him in the Highland Brigade; and as this officer was selected for this important post by His Excellency, and those whom he recommends as well as himself having worked under the immediate and constant supervision of His Excellency, it would be out of place for the Director to add anything in this report.

62. The Director would beg to bring forward the names of his personal staff,—

Lieutenant Clark, Paymaster.
" Carr, Quartermaster.

63. Lieutenant J. D. Clark, Madras Cavalry, although Paymaster to the Corps,—an office of great responsibility, considering the enormous number of men in the train,—has, in addition to this duty, frequently in times of great pressure, been both disembarking and embarking officer, staff officer, &c., &c.; in fact has made himself generally useful. Lieutenant Clark, with the small establishment allowed him for the Pay Department, has had very many difficulties to contend with, but has nevertheless managed to keep a regular and concise account of all his disbursements, which often amount to very large sums.

64. The stores required for the transport train have been considerable, and the creditable and efficient manner in which Lieutenant N. E. Carr, 10th Foot, has performed these duties under the most trying circumstances, has called forth unqualified approbation.

65. As His Excellency is aware the difficulties of the transport train have been from the first to last of no ordinary kind, and but for the peculiarly fortunate selection of officers from the several Presidencies and armies, the torrent could never have been stemmed. The high gentlemanly tone of the officers, their strong esprit de corps, the cheerful alacrity with which every order was obeyed, has been the brightest feature in the existence of the train.

66. They were placed in isolated command, and away from the personal control of the Director, who, however, commenced by placing both entire confidence and the credit and honour of the train in their hands, and most nobly has it been repaid.

67. With reference to the annexed report on the working of the Highland Brigade by Captain Hand, Sub-Director, the Director quite concurs with him as regards the equipments, but with respect to drill and discipline, he would go still further, especially in the former; the men should be well armed and well drilled in the same, as they would in that case be able to protect their own convoys, and not draw on the strength of the army.

68. The jemadars and non-commissioned officers should be all well mounted and armed, and the Director would introduce as nearly as possible the drill and discipline of an irregular corps.

69. Any one who has had any experience with the Abyssinian Force must see the necessity of keeping up the necleus of a transport train; and where wheeled carriage forms a part of the same, nothing could be a better guide in its whole formation than that of the Train des Equipages of the French army, of which the Director can speak from personal observation in the Crimea.

ROBERT WARDEN, Lieut. Colonel,
Director, Transport Train.

ENCLOSURE No. 2.

Report upon the "Highland Transport Service."

ABYSSINIAN FIELD FORCE,
Camp Antalo, 13th May 1868.

The Highland Transport was separated from the General Transport raised in Bombay, for service in Abyssinia, on the 14th February 1868; but it may be said to have derived its origin from the two Punjab Trains specially organized in October, 1867 for this campaign, to which it owes both its formulation and organization.

Organization.

It consists of four divisions of 2,000 mules each, which are sub-divided into troops of 150, and the following is the scale of the establishment of each division:—

1 Captain.
3 Subalterns.
4 European Inspectors (selected from British Regiments).
20 Jemadars or Troop Sergeant Majors.
80 Duffadars or Sergeants.
667 Muleteers.

1 Moonshee or Native Writer.

At the commencement of the campaign, one man had charge of two mules only, and it is as much as he can look after properly.

Stable, watering, and all other line duties at fixed hours are conducted with the same discipline and in precisely the same routine as in the Bengal Irregular Cavalry Regiments.

The muleteers are trained and drilled to their work, and kept in as strict a state of discipline as the circumstances of its being a newly raised corps will admit of.

The jemadars keep in Persian the "nominal roll", of each man in their troop, also the pay account.

The "long roll" of every man is kept in Persian by the Moonshee, also the pay account, which is also kept in English by the captain.

The officers commanding the Punjab Trains have summary powers, and can sentence to two years' imprisonment, in addition to corporal punishment.

The whole is under the direction of a Sub-Director, who is one of the head quarter staff, and reports direct to the Assistant Quartermaster General, Army Head Quarters, assisted by a staff officer and officer inspector, the latter of whom constantly travels from one station to another, and reports direct upon all matters that may come under his observation.

The train has worked regularly between Addigerat and Magdala* principally in carrying baggage, ammunition, hospital stores, and commissariat supplies for the force for one month.

At intermediate large stations, a staff officer has been permanently appointed to receive all reports from officers in charge of convoys, and he forwards the same to head quarters. At these posts small reserves are kept, from which sick and weakly mules are replaced.

We have had in work mules purchased in Spain, Egypt, India, Persia, and Abyssinia.

Mules.

The Spanish mules are principally large and ill-bred, and, from my own observation, are naturally of a weak constitution, and unable to bear great changes in climate. They have suffered much from a want of sufficiency of food, especially of grass, of which they do not eat enough even when it is procurable, for that which is obtained is dry and coarse, and they don't relish it.

When once in low condition, it is almost impossible to bring them round even with rest and grazing, abundance of which they get at the sick depôts; the few well-bred Spanish mules we have had have answered well.

The Persian, Indian, and Egyptian mules on the contrary are very much more enduring, require less grain, will eat any description of grass, and thrive upon it.

During the operations before Magdala, when the animals had for some days to endure hard work upon little food and water, which latter was very bad, the large mules fell off in condition very rapidly, whereas the others showed comparatively little change. The difficulties of the road, crossing and re-crossing the rivers Bashilo and Jidda, enervated as they were, was most trying, and many succumbed.

Return of Mules from 1st March.

The Abyssinian mules are not enduring; all those we purchased were then in good condition and fresh, still they have broken down in larger numbers than any others.

On the 1st of March there were 5,412 animals in the Highland Train, and of these 1,002 were sick. On the 1st April there were 6,661, and of these 1,002 sick.

On the 1st May, 7,690, and of these, 1,944 sick. Since the 1st March we have purchased in the country on the Highlands 2,720, and 1,740 have been transferred from the Lowlands.

Since the same date we have lost on the road 449, and 1,257 have been sent to the Lowland sick depôt at Koomaylee, and struck off our returns, and 309 were destroyed or died at Highland sick depôts.

Two thousand four hundred and eighteen were discharged from hospital and sent to work.

The mules had scarcely a fair start, for they were generally put to work the day after disembarkation, after some weeks between decks in a tropical climate.

Causes of Sick.

I have at all times consulted with Staff Veterinary Surgeon Hallen as to the causes and remedies for the large number of sick, and I consider the chief causes to be—"Hard work at great altitudes."

"Constant exposure with want of rest."

"Insufficiency of food and bad quality of grass."

"Irregularity in feeding."

"Galls, owing to bad saddles; want of time and means for repairing the same."

"Carelessness in saddling and loading."

Men.

The drivers of the train were entertained as syces or mule-drivers, in the position of public followers from the Punjab for the divisions raised in that district, and men from the same part of India were subsequently substituted for the Egyptians and Turks in the other two divisions, as the latter were found to be lazy, apathetic, and totally unmanageable. The jemadars and duffadars were selected from the drivers. To get men qualified for these posts has been a source of some difficulty, for, with the exception of the Punjab Trains, the men were sent to the country quite untrained.

It is impossible to over-rate the necessity of thoroughly training the men to a rigid system in the care of the animals, on the line of march as well as in the lines previous to their being sent on service.

A marked difference is apparent in the working of the men who were sent here without the advantage of any such training, and of those who had marched with their mules from Rawul Pindee to Kurrachee, a distance of nearly 1,000 miles.

The men evince an impression that they are looked down upon by their enlisted friends and relatives, consequently they take no interest in, and do not like, their work.

It is therefore most desirable that the corps should be so constituted as to induce men to seek service in it, so that an "esprit de corps" will naturally become inoculated, and this can never be the case as long as the men are looked upon as mere followers, and in no way superior to the cavalry syce or grass-cutter.

To render it popular as well as efficient, I am of opinion that the men should be enlisted as mule-drivers; they ought not to be over-drilled, and should not take any military duty except in connection with their own branch—such as guards to convoys and in their own line.

* About 300 miles.

I should like to see them lightly equipped, dressed in a loose blouse and knickerbockers on a khakee colour, with bandages, as worn by the Himalayan mountaineers, in place of gaiters, and each man furnished with a small kit-bag capable of containing one suit of clothes. The blanket and great coat should be carried by the men, and each mule his own cleaning things and picketing gear.

I would arm each man with a pistol and kookery (Nepaulese knife), which is a formidable weapon, and can, if required, be used for cutting wood or grass without injury. The Goorkhas use it for various rough purposes, and it continues serviceable.

There should be ten spare men per troop, who, as well as the jemadars and duffadars and artificers, might, in lieu of the pistol, be armed with a carbine, and they should be ample to render the corps independent of the regular army for escorts on convoys, or men cutting grass in an enemy's country.

This protection in the corps was much needed in this campaign, in parts of the country where armed and predatory bands were constantly on the look out for unprotected parties, such as grass-cutters, &c. It is true that all the men with this train were armed, but they turned their swords to so many purposes that they have become almost useless.

Should it ever be contemplated to raise a permanent transport corps in India, it is to be hoped that the system and interior economy may be entirely under military organization, and that it, as with the Highland Train in this campaign, may work under one department, viz., the Quartermaster General's.

Report on Pack Saddles.

Otago weight 43lbs. This saddle is decidedly the best adapted for general purposes, owing to the facility in loading it, and its general excellent manufacture. It seldom requires repair, except re-stuffing, which is easily and quickly done.

It is, however, apt to gall on the shoulder and hip, unless very carefully fitted. The leather of the pad should not project beyond the stuffing.

It is not suited to small mules, such as those obtained in the Punjab and Persia; and even if sizes sufficiently small for them were built, I doubt much if the tree would present sufficient surface to carry an ordinary load.

The Punjab pad weighs 33lbs., and is the best saddle for small mules. If carefully put on and girthed, it never galls.

All suleetah (loose canvas bags) saddles of which this is one, are bad in hilly countries, owing to the difficulty in fastening the loads to the saddle to prevent its slipping during ascent or descent. This difficulty, however, can be overcome; and Captain Bainbridge, commanding Rawul Pindee Train, is now trying a plan he has adopted of a rope let into the pad, which can be used for boxes in a manner similar to the loading-strap of the Otago, or to fasten the "suleetah" and load to the pad.

The Kumaon pad, used in 5-25 Royal Artillery, weighs 36 lbs., and is similar to the Punjab pad.

The Bombay pad weighs 40lbs., and rarely galls, but it is badly made, unwieldy, and constantly requires repairs.

The Bombay Arsenal pad weighs 26lbs. We have had more mules galled by this pad than by any other.

The McMahon weighs 66lbs. This includes a waterproof sheet. It has not yet had a fair trial, but its excessive weight is a great objection to it.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 10th September 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information :—

ACT No. XXI OF 1868.

An Act to appoint a Receiver of the property of the late Nawáb of the Carnatic.

Preamble.

WHEREAS certain property belonging to the estate of the late Nawáb of the Carnatic has lately been discovered both in the District of Madras and in the territories of His Highness the Nizám, and it is expedient to appoint a Receiver to collect and administer such property and any other property belonging to the said estate which may hereafter be discovered, or has not hitherto been administered; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Appointment of Receiver of Carnatic property.

1. The Governor of Fort St. George in Council shall appoint such person as he may think fit to act under the orders of the High Court of Judicature at Madras in the administration of the property left by the late Nawáb of the Carnatic and not hitherto collected or administered.

The person so appointed shall have power to collect and take possession of all such property: he shall deal with the same according to the provisions herein contained: he shall give such security (if any) for the due execution of his office as the said Governor in Council may require; and he shall be called "the Receiver of the Carnatic property."

Remuneration of Receiver.

2. The Receiver of the Carnatic property shall be entitled to such commission not exceeding five per centum upon the amount or value of the property collected and distributed under the provisions of this Act as the said Governor in Council shall prescribe. Such commission shall be charged to the estate of the said Nawáb.

Suspension or removal of Receiver.

3. The said Governor in Council may suspend or remove any person appointed such Receiver as aforesaid, and may also from time to time fill up any vacancy in such office occasioned by death, resignation, suspension or removal.

Receiver to represent Nawáb's estate in all proceedings.

4. The Receiver shall represent the estate of the said Nawáb in all proceedings relating thereto: he shall do all acts in performance of his duties by his name of office; and in all legal proceedings he shall be designated by such name.

No proceedings to which the Receiver may be a party shall abate by reason of the death, resignation, suspension or removal from office of any such Receiver, but the same shall be continued by his successor as if no such death, resignation, suspension or removal had occurred.

Receiver to collect Nawáb's property.

5. The Receiver shall have power to collect and take possession of all property, moveable or immoveable, and whether of the nature of State or public property or not, to which the said Nawáb at the time of his death was entitled, and if necessary to sue for and recover the same property, and to realize its value by sale or otherwise.

Conveyance on sale by Receiver of immoveable property.

6. Whenever the said Receiver by the order or with the sanction of the said High Court sells any of the said immoveable property, he shall execute a conveyance thereof to the purchaser.

Every such conveyance shall be valid as against the heirs of the said Nawáb, and all persons claiming under them, and also against all persons claiming under the said Nawáb by virtue of any conveyance or instrument declared by the said Court or by the late Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras to be void as against the creditors of the said Nawáb, or by virtue of any security the benefit of which was barred under the provisions of Act No. XXX of 1858

(to provide for the administration of the estate and for the payment of the debts of the late Nawáb of the Carnatic).

7. Upon any suit being instituted for the administration of the said estate, the said Receiver shall be deemed subject to the orders of the said High Court, and, so far as such orders shall not extend, to the general practice of such Court in the same manner as any other Receiver specially appointed thereby, except that the Court shall not require him to give security.

In case of suit for administration, Receiver to be subject to orders of High Court.

8. This Act shall be deemed to have come into operation on the second day of April 1868, and any person holding the office of Receiver of the Carnatic property immediately before that day shall be deemed to have been appointed on that day under this Act.

Commencement of Act.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 10th September 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information :—

ACT No. XXII OF 1868.

An Act to bring the Mauza Kheria, in the District Agra, under the operation of the general Regulations.

It is hereby enacted as follows :—

1. The Mauza Kheria shall be deemed to be annexed to the District of Agra, and the laws and regulations established for the internal administration of the said District, shall have full force and effect in the said Mauza; and the administration of civil and criminal justice, and the superintendence of the settlement and realization of the public revenue, and of all matters relating to rent in the said Mauza, are hereby vested in the officers for the time being appointed by the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces for the said District of Agra.

Extension to Mauzah Kheria of Acts and Regulations in force in District of Agra.

2. This Act shall be deemed to have come into operation on the twenty-sixth day of July 1866.

Commencement of Act.

WHITLEY STOKES,

Asst. Secy. to the Govt. of India, Home Dept. (Legislative).

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 1st September 1868 :—

No. 25 OF 1868.

A Bill to Legalize Marriages between certain Natives of India not professing the Christian Religion.

WHEREAS marriages between Natives of British India not professing Christianity are held to be illegal unless solemnized in accordance with the rites of some religion recognised by law, and the children of such Natives contracting marriages not solemnized in accordance with the rites aforesaid are held to be illegitimate and incapable of inheriting property; and whereas it is expedient to legalize such marriages when solemnized in accordance with the provisions of this Act; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Preamble.

1. This Act may be cited as "The Native Marriage Act, 1868."

Short title.

2. Every marriage between Natives of British India not professing the Christian religion and objecting to be married in accordance with the rites of the Hindú, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Pársí, or Jewish religion, shall be valid—

Conditions of validity of Native marriages.

(1). If it is solemnized in the presence of the Registrar hereinafter mentioned and of at least three credible witnesses, in whose hearing each of the parties makes the following declarations :—

"I, A. B., am a Native of British India. I do not profess the Christian religion, and I object to be married in accordance with the rites of the Hindú, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Pársí or Jewish religion."

"I, A. B., declare in the presence of Almighty God that I take thee C. D. to be my lawful wedded wife [or husband]," or words to that effect :

(2). If the parties are unmarried, and the husband has completed his age of eighteen years, and the wife has completed her age of fourteen years :

(3). If, in case the wife has not completed her age of eighteen years, the consent of her father or guardian has previously been given to the marriage ; and

(4). If the parties are not related to each other in any of the degrees prohibited in the first schedule hereto annexed, whether the relationship is legitimate or illegitimate.

3. Every such marriage hereafter solemnized shall, as soon as may be after the solemnization thereof, be certified by such person as the Local Government shall from time to time appoint in this behalf for the District in which the marriage is solemnized. He shall be called the Registrar of Native Marriages, and he may be the Registrar appointed under Act No. XX of 1866 or any other law for the registration of assurances for the time being in force.

Certificate of marriage.

Such certificate shall be in the form contained in the second Schedule to this Act, and shall be signed by (1) the Registrar, (2) the parties to the marriage if both have completed their age of eighteen years, and if the woman has not completed such age, by the husband and by her father or guardian, and (3) by three witnesses present at the marriage.

Fee payable to Registrar.

4. The husband shall pay a fee of two rupees to the Registrar, who shall thereupon enter the certificate in a register to be kept by him for the purpose.

Register to be open to inspection.

Such register shall at all reasonable times be open for inspection, and shall be presumptive evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained. Certified extracts therefrom shall on application be given by the Registrar on the payment to him by the applicant of two rupees for each such extract.

Penalty for failure to subscribe the certificate.

5. Every person required to subscribe or attest such certificate, who wilfully neglects or omits so to do, shall, on conviction of such neglect or omission, be punished by a fine not exceeding rupees one hundred.

Penalty for signing certificates containing false statements.

6. Every person making, signing, or attesting any such certificate containing a statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true, shall be deemed guilty of the offence of forgery as defined in the Indian Penal Code.

Legalization of prior marriages.

7. Every Native of British India described in section 2 who before the passing of this Act, has gone through any ceremony with the intent of thereby contracting marriage shall be deemed to have been married under this Act, if the marriage has been solemnized in the presence of at least three witnesses, and if the conditions specified in section two, clauses two, three and four, have been complied with in the case of such marriage.

Punishment of bigamy.

8. Every person married under this Act who during the lifetime of his or her wife or husband, contracts any marriage without having been lawfully divorced from such wife or husband, shall be subject to the penalties provided in Sections 494 and 495 of the Indian Penal Code for the offence of marrying again during the lifetime of a husband or wife.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Simla on Thursday, the 10th September 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, presiding.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.
The Hon'ble G. N. Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. S. Maine.
The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C.B.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.

CARNATIC RECEIVER'S BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to appoint a Receiver of the property of the late Nawáb of the Carnatic be taken into consideration. He said that the Committee had merely made two slight additions to the preamble and to the last section.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE then moved that the Bill as amended be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

MAUZÁ KHERIA (EXTENSION OF ACTS AND REGULATIONS) BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. STRACHEY moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to bring the Mauza Kheria, in the District of Agra, under the operation of the General Regulations be taken into consideration. He said that the Committee had made no alteration in the Bill. There was nothing for them to consider, nor was there anything for the Council to discuss. Down to July 1866, the Mauza had been foreign territory: it had then become part of British India, and legislation was necessary to extend to it the general Acts and Regulations now in force in the North-Western Provinces.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble MR. STRACHEY then moved that the Bill be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

NATIVE MARRIAGE BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE moved for leave to introduce a Bill to legalize marriages between certain Natives of India not professing the Christian religion. He said that the Bill had been prepared at the instance of a sect, of which the origin and general character were probably known more or less to the Council—the Brahmos. It appeared that, since its foundation by Rammohun Roy, the sect had gone through several phases of religious feeling. Of late, its members had become unwilling to contract marriages, or to allow their children to contract marriages, with the rites practised among orthodox Hindús, and these marriages were, MR. MAINE believed, celebrated according to a reformed ritual arranged by the Brahmos themselves. Some doubt, however, having suggested itself as to the legal validity of these marriages, the Brahmos submitted a case for the opinion of the learned Advocate General of the Government of India. Mr. Cowie replied in effect that the Brahmo marriages not having been celebrated with Hindú or Mahometan rites of orthodox regularity, and not conforming to the procedure prescribed by any law, or to the usages of any recognized religion, were invalid, and the offspring of them were accordingly illegitimate. The Brahmos, therefore, through a Native gentleman whom they acknowledged as their representative,—Bábu Keshub Chunder Sein,—applied to the Government of India for relief. Such relief, MR. MAINE apprehended, must be granted. It was not the policy of the Queen's Government in India to refuse the power of marriage to any of Her Majesty's subjects, and he doubted whether even orthodox Hindús would wish to deny to the Brahmos a legal privilege fully enjoyed by Santals and Gonds. Some slight difficulty had occurred in the preparation of the measure. When relief in any matter connected with religion was sought by any sect or body of the Natives of India, and when a case for such relief was established, he held it to be good policy to confine the relief to the particular sect or body making application. Considering the unknown depths of Native feeling on these subjects, it was better not to generalize beyond the immediate necessity, and hence MR. MAINE thought the policy which confined the relief of the Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act to Christians was sound, although there were doubtless other classes in the same position. But, after much conversation with the Native gentleman above referred to, MR. MAINE had convinced himself that the creed of the Brahmos lacked stability. The process by which the sect was formed might be increasing in activity; but there seemed also to be growing disinclination to accept any set of common tenets. It would be difficult for legal purposes to define a Brahmo, and, if no definition were given, there might shortly be petitions for relief by persons who were in the same legal position as the present applicants, but who declared that they could not conscientiously call themselves Brahmos. Hence the Bill had been drawn with some degree of generality. It would legalize marriages between Natives of India "not professing the Christian and objecting to be married in accordance with the rites of the Hindu, Mahometan, Buddhist, Pársí or Jewish religion," provided the marriages were celebrated under certain conditions. The religions mentioned were the only recognized religions of India which were worth referring to. The conditions were as follows:—that marriages should be solemnized in the presence of an official to be styled the Registrar of Native Marriages; that the parties should be unmarried; that the husband should be over the age of eighteen, and the wife over the age of fourteen, and that the parties should not be related to each other in any of the degrees prohibited in the first schedule. If the wife had not completed the age of eighteen years, the previous consent of her father or guardian was also required. The Registrar would be appointed for each district by the Local Government, and would probably be, as in the case of Pársí marriages, the Registrar appointed under the law for the registration of assurances. The Registrar would make a certificate of the marriage, and enter it in his register, which would be open to public inspection. The Bill also contained a clause legalizing prior marriages between the Natives described in the Bill, if the marriage had been solemnized in the presence of three witnesses, and if the provisions as to age, consent, and prohibited degrees had been complied with. Lastly, the Bill contained a clause subjecting every person married under the proposed Act to the penalties of bigamy who, during the lifetime of his or her wife or husband, contracted a marriage without having been lawfully divorced.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. Maine then asked the President to suspend the Rules in order that the Bill might be introduced.

The President declared the Rules suspended.

The Hon'ble Mr. Maine then introduced the Bill. He said that it would be in substance a Civil Marriage Bill, having, however, the peculiarity that the persons availing themselves of the new power must not be Christians (to whom a special system of Marriage Registration applied), and must expressly object to be married with the rites of any one of the recognized Native religions. With religious ceremonial it would not be concerned. The Brahmos could add to the requirements of the law whatever ritual they preferred, and the result would be that, as in several European countries, there would be first a civil and afterwards a religious marriage. It was necessary for Mr. Maine to state to the Council that the Brahmos, through their representative, had made one request which had not been complied with. They had asked for an express legislative declaration that the descendants of persons marrying under the Act should continue to live under the Civil law which was applicable to the last ancestor who professed a recognized Native religion. It would seem, however, that all which the Brahmos required was given by the existing law as laid down by the Privy Council in a most important case, Abraham v. Abraham (Moore's Indian Appeals, vol. IX, p. 195). It was there decided that a Native of India, abandoning Hindúism or Mahometanism as a religion, and the descendants of such Native, might at pleasure continue to live under Hindú or Mahometan Civil law, or might exchange it for any other set of usages known to the law. The provision requested might, therefore, have the effect of abridging the liberty of the Brahmos, as taking away their power to adopt another, but a recognized, law. MR. MAINE commended the Bill to the Council as one for which a strong case had been made out and one which, after all, involved a very small extension of the principle of the Lex Loci Act (XXI of 1850). That Act relieved from all civil disabilities persons excommunicated from any recognized Native religion, or, in other words, the first generation of converts or dissidents, but it did not expressly provide relief to the second and ulterior generations. The omission was partly repaired by the decision of the Privy Council, and would be in part supplied by the present measure.

ARTICLES OF WAR.

The Hon'ble Colonel NORMAN moved for leave to introduce a Bill to consolidate and amend the Articles of War for the government of Her Majesty's Native forces. He said that this measure would have been brought before the Council by the Hon'ble Major General Sir Henry Durand, but for his unavoidable absence, and he, Colonel NORMAN, was authorized to state that the Bill had received Sir Henry Durand's entire concurrence. The bulk of the existing Articles were contained in an Act passed in 1861, but this Act had subsequently been amended twice, namely, by Acts V of 1863 and XXVI of 1865. Considering that the Act of 1861 had been passed not long after the suppression of the Mutiny, it was matter of surprise and satisfaction that so few changes of substance had been found necessary. Some such changes, however, were desirable, and it was thought better to embody them in an Act consolidating the whole law on the subject than to add a fourth to the three Acts in which that law was now contained. The Bill had been prepared with great care in the Military Department. It was then submitted to the Legislative Department, and Hon'ble Members would find that the opportunity had been taken, not only to improve the arrangement of this large and somewhat complicated body of Military Law, but also to make numerous verbal alterations which would have the effect of rendering more precise the description of the crimes punishable under the proposed Act. Care had been taken, however, to avoid falling into the error of over-technical particularity. The Bill would be accompanied by a Statement of Objects and Reasons, which would afford the Council and the Public full information as to all the changes of any importance which the Bill proposed to effect. The Bill was concurred in by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and careful attention had been paid by its framers to the communications on the subject which had been received from the Governments of Madras and Bombay.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned to the 17th of September 1868.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Simla on Thursday, the 17th September 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.
The Hon'ble G. N. Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. S. Maine.

The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Colonel Norman, C.B.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.

VILLAGE POLICE (N. W. P.) BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. STRACHEY moved for leave to introduce a Bill to make further provision for the maintenance of the Rural Police in the North-Western Provinces. He said that when the Rural Police Act No. II of 1865 was enacted, the provisions in force respecting Khálsá Estates were made applicable under Section 8 to Muáfí and Nazráná villages. These provisions were, first, a house-tax under that Act, and second, the Municipal cess, which was a percentage on the jama fixed at the Settlement in discharge of the obligation of the proprietors for the entertainment of the Village Police.

When the Act was passed, the Municipal cess was fixed at $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. of the jama. But this was found to be inadequate for the payment of an efficient village constabulary. It was in consequence raised, under the orders of the late Lieutenant Governor, to $3\frac{7}{8}$ on the assets, or $7\frac{3}{4}$ on the jama, which amount was found to be sufficient for the purpose, but not more.

As, however, the former amount, according to the original rule, viz., $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. on the jama, was entered in the Act as leviable from Muáfí estates, the Collector was unable to assess such properties at a higher rate. At the same time, it was obvious that whatever burdens for Police purposes were borne by Khálsá villages, should equally be borne by Muáfí villages, that is, that they should contribute in precisely the same proportion.

The Local Government accordingly proposed that, for section eight of the Rural Police Act, a section be substituted, which would be found in section twelve of the Bill.

The Rural Police Act having already been once amended, namely, by Act II of 1866, it has been thought desirable to repeal and re-enact those measures instead of adding a third Act to the two in which the law on the subject is now contained.

The Council then adjourned till the 24th September 1868.

ENFORCEMENT OF SECTIONS 33 AND 34 OF THE INDIAN CONSOLIDATED CUSTOMS ACT OF 1863.

Despatch from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, to His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council, (Separate Revenue),—No. 1, dated 16th January 1868.

With reference to my despatch to your Excellency in Council, dated the 15th of November last, No. 21, I forward to you herewith a copy of a memorial* to my address from the Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers at Glasgow, remonstrating against the strict enforcing of Clauses 33 and 34 of the Indian Consolidated Customs Act of 1863, announced in the notification of your Excellency in Council, which was published in the London Gazette of the 22nd of November last.

* Dated 26th December 1867.

2. I desire that you will take this memorial into your early consideration, and report to me your opinion thereon.

To the RIGHT HON'BLE SIR S. NORTHCOTE, BART., M.P., Secretary of State for India in Council.

The memorial of the Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers in the city of Glasgow, incorporated by Royal Charter,

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH,—

That the attention of this Chamber has been called to the notification by the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council regarding the strict enforcement of Sections 33 and 34 of the "Indian Consolidated Customs Act" of 1863, which appeared in the London Gazette of 22nd November 1867.

That according to the notification, a true specification of all goods imported in the respective vessels will be required from all Masters and Commanders of vessels, and it is intimated that Masters and Commanders of vessels, who shall be unable to enter in their reports or manifests a true specification of all goods imported in their respective vessels in consequence of their neglect or failure to obtain a full and detailed description of all such goods in their bills of lading before the shipment of such goods, will be liable to the penalties laid down in the 34th section of the above-mentioned Act, such penalty not exceeding one thousand rupees.

That your memorialists desire to represent the great inconvenience and the utter inutility of the requirement now made. It imposes on shipowners and shipmasters in this country the duty of requiring from merchants and shippers detailed information as to the contents of every package which may be shipped. It imposes on the merchant or shipper the duty of disclosing before shipment to the shipowner (who may be, and often is, a rival in trade) the precise nature and quantity of the goods which are being exported. As regards the inutility of the requirement, it is only necessary to remind you that on every shipment of goods, the shipper must pass entries at the Custom House in this country containing a full specification of all the goods so shipped, and this process has to be repeated, and the invoices exhibited before the goods can be passed through the Custom House on their arrival in India. For fiscal purposes at Calcutta, more minute particulars are required than can be supposed to be within the knowledge of almost any shipmaster in some description of goods, the weights of the specific goods must be given, in others (yarns for instance) the various counts, whilst in most others the value is requisite. For fiscal purposes, therefore, the additional specification in the ship's manifest is altogether unnecessary; it is equally so for statistical purposes, and your memorialists are unable to see that any result will follow from the enforcement of the regulation except a great complication of mercantile forms.

Your memorialists therefore respectfully ask that you will be pleased to reconsider the regulation, and direct the notification to be recalled.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Signed in name and by appointment of the Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers in the city of Glasgow this 26th day of December 1867.

ALEX. RONALDSON, President.
J. S. FLEMING, Secretary.

No. 1162, dated 22nd February, 1868.

Order by the Government of India, Financial Department.

Ordered, that a copy of the above be forwarded to the Government of Bengal for early report, with reference to communication from this Department, dated 31st December 1867, No. 3335.

Despatch from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, to His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council, (Separate Revenue),—No. 2, dated 24th January 1868.

With reference to my despatch of the 16th instant, No. 1, I transmit, for the early consideration of your Excellency in Council, a copy of a letter from Mr. R. W. Crawford, M. P., dated the 8th instant, and enclosing one from the Chairman of the General Shipowners' Society and other individuals and firms, remonstrating against the strict enforcing of Sections 33 and 34 of the Indian Consolidated Customs Act of 1863, which was announced in the notification transmitted to me for publication in this country in your despatch, dated the 17th of September last, No. 18.

2. I desire that I may receive a report upon the objections contained in these letters, as well as upon the memorial formerly sent, at your earliest convenience.

From R. W. CRAWFORD, ESQ., to the Secretary of State for India,—dated 8th January 1868.

I have been requested to forward to you the accompanying letter from the Chairman of the General Shipowners' Society and other individuals and firms engaged in shipping business, relative to the advertisement published on the 23rd October last, under the signature of Mr. Under Secretary Melvill, respecting the enforcement, after the 1st April 1868, of the provisions of Sections 33 and 34 of the Indian Consolidated Customs Act, 1863.

I may remark that an object somewhat similar to that in the view of the Government of India was sought to be gained in this country by the substitution of a "Customs Bill of Lading" for the ordinary Shipping Bill under Section 21 of the 23 Vic., cap. 22, but that the process of endorsing upon the bill of lading the units of entry, together with the particulars of the goods for the purposes of registration and charge, was found to be so onerous and difficult in practice as to require the intervention of Parliament, and the clause of the Act imposing the duty was repealed accordingly.

The shipping bill, with full particulars of the goods it refers to, is now required to be delivered at the Customs House within six days at the date of the ship's clearance. It occurs to me that the objects which the Government of India has in view might be forwarded if a copy of this document were transmitted to India officially, in anticipation of the ship's arrival at her port of discharge.

From JOHN J. LIDGETT, ESQ., Chairman of the General Shipowners' Society and other individuals and firms, to the Secretary of State for India,—dated 31st December 1867.

We beg leave very respectfully to call your attention to an advertisement, dated 23rd October 1867, under the signature of Mr. Under Secretary Melvill, publishing a notification of the Government of India with respect to the strict enforcement, after the 1st April 1868, of the provisions of Sections 33 and 34 of the Indian Consolidated Customs Act, 1863.

The notification, together with the clauses in question, are set out at the foot of this letter.

The intention of the Government is to require "a full specification" of all goods imported into the ports of India, to disallow the use of "such terms as merchandize sundries," and the like general description of goods, "and to inflict a penalty not exceeding one thousand rupees on all Masters and Commanders of vessels who shall be unable to enter in their reports or manifests a true specification of all goods imported in their respective vessels in consequence of their neglect or failure to obtain a full and detailed description of all such goods in their bills of lading before the shipment of such goods."

We are aware of, and are very desirous of assisting in giving effect to, the object which the Government have in view, but we respectfully submit that the fullness of information required by the Government of India cannot be furnished without causing innumerable obstructions and delays in the transaction of shipping business in this country, the origin of which will not be found in its own laws or regulations.

We are ready to state, if we are required to do so, the nature of the obstructions and delays to which we refer. It may be sufficient if we say that it will not be possible to despatch our vessels with the regularity and punctuality required to satisfy shippers, and to perform the covenants of charter parties, if owners, brokers, and other agents have to shield the master from what is in effect a "foreign" penalty for omissions, which it may be wholly beyond his power to rectify.

A vessel may be under engagement to leave the docks on a certain day. On the day previous to the day named, goods may be received from the continent in transitu from the north or elsewhere for immediate shipment, but the information required by the Government of India to be inserted in detail in the ship's manifest is not forthcoming, and cannot be obtained without reference to the place of the manufacture, growth, or original packing of the goods.

The information required as to the description of goods necessarily described as merchandize or sundries can be, as in fact it has always been, afforded by production of the invoice by the consignee or examination of the packages at the port of discharge.

In conclusion, we may remark that, while impressed with the importance of the adoption of every reasonable requirement, it is our most decided opinion that the strictness of the terms of the notification alluded to must prove to merchants, shipowners, and shipbrokers not only onerous and exacting, but almost impossible to be adhered to, and we therefore trust that you will be pleased to take the matter into your consideration, and adopt such measures as shall lead to its withdrawal.

Despatch from the Secretary of State for India, to His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council (Separate Revenue),—No. 3, dated 24th January 1868.

I have to inform your Excellency in Council that I have received two further memorials, remonstrating against the strict enforcement required by your recent notification of Sections 33 and 34 of the Indian Consolidated Customs Act of 1863—one from the Chamber of Commerce at Northampton, the other from the Chamber of Commerce at Dundee.

2. As these memorials are in the same terms as that of the Chamber of Commerce at Glasgow, which was sent to you in my Despatch No. 1 of the 16th instant, I do not forward a copy of them, but you will consider and report upon them in connection with the other remonstrances on this subject, sent with my Despatch of this date, No. 2.

No. 1331, dated 6th March 1868.

Order by the Government of India, Financial Department.

Ordered, that a copy of the above despatches be forwarded to the Government of Bengal for early report, in continuation of endorsement from this Department, dated 22nd February 1868, No. 1162.

From H. L. HARRISON, ESQ., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Financial Department,—No. 1057, dated 30th March 1868.

No. 1162, dated 22nd February 1868.
,, 1331, ,, 6th March 1868.

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of the communication from your office cited in the margin, requesting the early submission by this Government of a report on the memorials presented to the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India by the Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers in the city of Glasgow and by the Shipowners' Society of London, remonstrating against the strict enforcement of Sections 33 and 34 of the Indian Consolidated Customs Act of 1863 as required by the recent notification of the Government of India.

2. In reply I am directed to forward herewith, for the information of the Governor General in Council, a copy of a report* received from the Board of Revenue, Lower Provinces, and to state that the Lieutenant Governor is of opinion that the true nature and object of the notification have been misunderstood by the memorialists, and that on their having the matter fully explained to them, they will no doubt see that the requirements of Government are really unobjectionable in themselves, while they are manifestly necessary for the security of the Custom House and of the goods stored there.

* No. 1167C, dated 7th March 1868.

From R. L. MANGLES, ESQ., Officiating Junior Secretary to the Board of Revenue, L. P., to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal,—No. 1167C, dated 7th March 1868.

With reference to your memorandum No. 705, dated the 26th ultimo, forwarding for report a memorial to the address of the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India, from the Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers of the city of Glasgow, remonstrating against the strict enforcement of the provisions of Sections 33 and 34 of the Indian Consolidated Customs Act of 1863, as announced in the notification published by the Government of India, and also in the London Gazette of the 22nd of November last, I am directed to state that it is apparent from a perusal of the memorial that the members of the Chamber of Commerce at Glasgow are at present unaware of the grounds on which the publication of the notification was deemed necessary, and further that they have formed an exaggerated conclusion as to the character of its requirements.

2. The information which the law requires masters of ships to enter in their manifests, and to which special attention was called in the notification, was not insisted upon for either fiscal or statistical purposes. As in England, all commercial and trade returns in this country are compiled from the full data contained in bills of entry; nor is a detailed description of the contents of each case or package required by either the law or the terms of the notification. In the words of the Act "a true specification of all goods imported" is to be entered by the master of a vessel in his manifest, and according to the approved form in which such returns are to be made, a true description of the particular sort or kind of merchandize contained in each case or package in detail is requisite. The use of such loose terms as "merchandize" or "sundries" in the manifest is prohibited, but all that the master is called upon to report is the general nature and character of the contents of each case, a detailed description of either weights or quantities was not required.

3. The facts which drew attention to a laxity in the procedure prevalent in the Custom House, and to the necessity of enforcing the requirements of the law, were mentioned by the Collector of Customs in his letter No. 337, dated the 2nd of October 1866. In that communication, the Collector stated that two boxes loosely described in the ship's manifest as containing merchandize had accidentally exploded while in transit to the Custom House, and that it was then for the first time discovered that they contained in the one instance lucifer matches, and in the other inflammable acids.

4. Under the Indian Customs Act, all goods, other than those of an inflammable and dangerous character, are required to be taken to the Custom House for examination and appraisement, and Section 54 of the Act authorizes masters of ships to call upon the Custom House authorities to receive and take charge of all goods which may not be cleared before the expiration of fifteen days after the entry of any vessel, or at any earlier period, if so specified in the bill of lading. The strict enforcement of the provisions of Section 34, therefore, is clearly necessary for the general protection of the property stored in the Custom House, and for the safety of the buildings themselves.

5. To meet cases in which the master of a ship may be unable to specify the contents of any box or package, the Collector of Customs has been directed to open all such in some open place without the Custom House premises, and on no account to receive them within the building. This precaution, together with the strict enforcement of the penalties of the law in all cases, in which masters of ships are unable to specify the character of their goods or enter an erroneous description in their manifests, will, the Board believe, insure the general security of both public and private property within the port.

6. The original recommendation made by the Chamber of Commerce that lucifer matches and every description of combustible and explosive article should be brought under the operation of Act III of 1865, was supported by the Board, but whether the Government are pleased to legislate further in this direction or not, it is still necessary that the presence of all such inflammable articles, and the cases in which they are contained, should be noted by masters of vessels in their manifests.

From the Government of India, to the Secretary of State for India,—No. 14, dated 20th April 1868.

With reference to your Separate Revenue Despatches, dated 24th January, Nos. 2 and 3, relating to remonstrances against the proposed strict enforcement of Sections 33 and 34 of the Consolidated Customs Act, we have the honor to forward a copy of a communication on the subject from the Government of Bengal.

2. The explanation afforded by the Board of Revenue will probably dispel the apprehensions entertained by the memorialists, and satisfy them of the propriety of the restriction. It certainly is of importance that explosive or inflammable goods such as lucifers and acids should not be carried, as they hitherto have been carried, under the general description of sundries or merchandize into the Custom House, to the hazard of life and property.

Read the following:—

Despatch from the Secretary of State for India, to His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council (Separate Revenue),—No. 16, dated 16th July 1868.

I have considered in Council the Despatch from your Excellency in Council, No. 14, Separate Revenue, dated the 20th of April, with which you forwarded the explanations of the Government of Bengal on the remonstrances made by certain commercial bodies in regard to the 33rd and 34th Sections of the Consolidated Customs Act, and communicated to your Government in my Despatches Nos. 2 and 3 of the 24th of January last.

2. On the receipt of the despatch under reply, I transmitted a copy of it and its enclosures to the Chambers of Commerce at Glasgow, Dundee, and Northampton, and to the General Shipowners' Society, expressing at the same time the expectation that these documents would dispel the apprehensions which had been entertained in regard to the provisions of the Customs Act, with respect to restrictions on explosive and inflammable goods.

No. 2122, dated 28th August 1868.

Order by the Government of India, Financial Department.

Ordered, that a copy of the above be sent to the Government of Bengal, with reference to its letter No. 1057, dated 30th March 1868.

Ordered also, that a copy of the above despatch, together with the previous correspondence on the subject thereof, be forwarded to the Home Department, with the request that it may be published in the Supplement to the Gazette of India.

DEHRA DOON	168 30 0	78 0 0	Scarcely a field of cotton was ever grown in the Doon until orders were issued to District Officers to encourage its cultivation. During the years 1864, 1865, and 1866, some zemindars attempted to grow it under instructions from District Officers, but have discovered that the produce of the crop is not good, and that it requires more trouble and expense than they care to bestow, and have therefore again ceased to interest themselves in its cultivation. The soil and climate of the Doon are not adapted to the cultivation of cotton. During the past year, there has been an extensive sale both of English and Native cotton goods. English cotton goods have been imported in large quantities, and have sold cheaper than heretofore. The price of Native cotton goods has also fallen. The price of raw cotton has fallen from 2¾ seers per rupee to 3¼ seers.
SAHARUNPORE	29,194 0 0	26,133 0 0	The decrease in the out-turn is attributable solely to the violent storms of wind aud rain which prevailed throughout the ripening season. The changes of prices of raw cotton in the London and Liverpool markets have had but little effect on prices in the district. The average rate per maund for cleaned cotton for the past twelve months has been Rs. 12-8-10, the lowest quotation being Rs. 10-15-6 in October, and the highest Rs. 14-8-0 in March. The native cloth manufacture is confined to the production of coarse cloth, such as garah, &c., which is used almost exclusively by the labouring classes and poorer agriculturists, and among them the demand for it is quite as great as, if not greater than, it has ever been, owing to the greater and more diffused prosperity of these classes.

MOZUFFERNUGGUR ...	42,409	0	0	41,096	0	0	Although the estimated area under cotton in 1867-68 was larger than in 1866-67, the out-turn was less, which may have been owing to the heavy rain-fall. Although the out-turn has not exceeded that of last year, it has been fair. The price of cotton in Liverpool and London does apparently influence the demand for cotton, as may be seen from the difference of prices prevailing now and during the American war. The demand for the coarse country cloth is about the same as last year, but the price rather less—probably one or two annas per "than." Long cloth (English) is cheaper, but there are great complaints of the injurious pressing used to glaze this description of cloth. The demand for country cloth is not on the increase, and will, as the prices of English cloth decrease, continue to diminish.
MEERUT .	79,479	0	3	74,707	0	0	The decrease in out-turn is probably owing to the very heavy falls of rain which occurred once or twice during the past monsoon. The area under cotton cultivation continues to decrease, and, unless there is another cotton famine in the European market, future cotton cultivation will remain stationary at or about the present area,—viz., 54,171 acres. Prices had been ruling very low during the past year, but towards the beginning of 1868, there was a sudden rise. Cotton which had been selling at Rs. 10 and even Rs. 9 per maund quickly rose to Rs. 15 and Rs. 16. It then fell slightly, afterwards fluctuated, and is now again selling at the latter price. It will require more than a mere famine in the cotton market to induce the Natives to extend its cultivation in any great degree. The increasing price of wheat, the late enormous rise in the price of sugar and goor, and of all produce in proportion, offer temptations as strong as any temporary bazaar cry for cotton. The native cloth manufactures are improving. Weavers now obtain the same rates for their labours as they did before the cotton famine, and the demand for their labour has doubled within the last year. There is no appreciable demand for foreign made cloths. The reasons are that the people do not trust or value them, and that Manchester goods are not sufficiently brought to them.

BOOLUNDSHUHUR ...	31,150 0 0	26,441 0 0	Want of rain at the time of sowing lessened the area, and excess of rain shortly after the crop sprang up is said to have damaged the out-turn. The price of cotton varied during the past twelve months from Rs. 11 to Rs. 18; the lowest prices obtained in September and the highest in March. The demand for English cloths keeps steadily on the increase, and the sales of native cloths are stated to have been nearly 10 per cent. less in the year 1867-68 than in former years.
ALLYGURH	64,673 0 0	54,586 0 0	Less land was sown with cotton this year than last, because, at the time of sowing, cotton was selling at Rs. 13 per maund, and the cultivators apprehended that it would not pay. The demand for country cloth seems to be the same as it was in former years. Owing to the cheapness of cotton, more native cloth was produced and sold during the year under report.

BIJNOUR	31,110 35 0¾	27,536 7 0	The abundant rain-fall during the autumn months of 1867 was injurious to the cotton crop, which was less productive than had been expected. During the latter part of the year, the price of raw cotton has risen considerably. The import trade in English piece-goods has been materially stimulated, and these have fallen in price to the extent of about two annas in the rupee. The demand for country cloth and its price seems to be stationary.
MORADABAD	41,288 30 0	29,552 0 0	The decrease in out-turn is due mainly to the exceptional character of the rainy season, which was unusually long, and the rain-fall heavy. In 1865 the yield of cotton was large, but, in consequence of decrease in exportation, the rates ranged from Rs. 17 to Rs. 14 per maund. In 1866 the yield was very much the same as in 1865, but increased exports raised it to Rs. 30. This year, with a much smaller yield, the rate is the same as in 1865, and would no doubt have returned to nearly its normal state before the cotton dearth, had the out-turn been of an average character. In consequence of diminished exports, country looms are everywhere springing up again, and weavers are forsaking the other professions to which the closing of their looms had driven them for subsistence.

BUDAON	20,953	0	0	15,500	0	0	The condition of the crop was good early in the season, but the excessive rain later in the season had an injurious effect on it. Owing to the failure in the out-turn, the price of cotton, which had been only fairly good when the crop was sown, rose considerably, and still seems to be on the ascendant. The increase in the demand for local consumption has as much to say to this rise in price as anything else, and this may be deduced from the fact that the thicker and coarser kinds of English piece-goods, such as what are called "Markeen," &c., are in great demand at enhanced prices, while the better kinds of Manchester goods are selling cheap. The Manchester trade would do well to import in larger quantities the cloths of coarser texture, and if these were coloured, they would sell still better. The native cloth trade is just now very good.
BAREILLY	19,845	0	0	14,890	0	0	The decrease in out-turn is attributable to the severe monsoon. The prices of raw cotton have been much affected by the rise and fall of prices in the English markets. At one time it reached Rs. 27 per maund; now it stands at Rs. 22. The native weavers are returning to their old occupations, and the price of country cloth has accordingly fallen; but there is no fear of the demand for English cloth being affected thereby.
SHAHJEHANPORE ...	13,750	0	0	11,693	0	0	The decrease is owing partly to scarcity of rain, and partly to the fall in the price of cotton, in consequence of which a smaller quantity of land was sown. No cotton has been exported during the past year for Europe. The demand for native cloth manufactured in Europe is at present great, because it is cheaper and finer than that manufactured in this country; but the greater portion of the middle and lower classes prefer cloth of native manufacture, because the cloth manufactured in Europe is adulterated, and consequently less durable.
TERRAI PERGUNNAHS ...	1,092	0	0	674	0	0	Cotton is grown in the Terrai only for home consumption. The excessive rains account for the falling off in the crop.

AGRA DIVISION.

MUTTRA	1,13,848	13	4½	1,01,474 5 1½	The decrease in cultivation of cotton is attributable to the fall in the price of the staple at the commencement of the year. Prices ranged from Rs. 10 to Rs. 12 per maund in April 1867, and have now risen to Rs. 15 and Rs. 16 per maund. The comparative decrease in out-turn is reported to have been caused by excessive rain. Native cloth has increased in price during the year, but the demand has slackened in consequence of the fall in price of English goods. The demand for English cloth for ordinary wear has increased considerably, and people of the poorer classes are now wearing English cloth for the first time for some years.
AGRA	1,13,546	8	8	80,047 30 8	The cotton crop was damaged by excess of rain.
FURRUCKABAD	9,259	0	0	8,113 0 0	Decrease owing to excess of rain. In April 1867 the price of cotton was Rs. 13-8-0 per maund. In January 1868 it rose to Rs. 23-4-0, and again fell in February to Rs. 16, and in March to Rs. 15-4-0. During the year 1867, the exports were much less than they formerly were, but for the last three months, they have improved with the improving prices obtained, owing, it is believed, to the export of the staple to the China market. Though the price of the raw material has fallen so considerably, yet the price of native manufactured cloth still rules very high. For ordinary wear, English-made cottons are gradually driving the native manufacture out of the market. None but the lowest classes use any but imported cloth.
MYNPOORIE	29,024	5	12	11,180 2 6	Excess of rain injured the crop; hence the decrease in the out-turn. The decrease in the extent of cotton cultivation is due to the comparatively low price of cotton, which, during the last months of 1866 and throughout 1867, kept pretty steadily between Rs. 16 and Rs. 17 per maund. In February 1868, the price was Rs. 17 per maund; in March it rose to Rs. 18, and in April to Rs. 21. The trade in cloth of both English and native manufacture has been active.
ETAWAH	61,983	27	4	35,460 34 4	The cotton crop was much damaged by excess of rain. The price of cotton has varied during the year from Rs. 15 to Rs. 21 per maund. The present demand for native cloth does not show any improvement on former years. Its manufacture is not carried beyond the usual scale, and there is nothing to show that any material change is likely to take place in the future demand for it.
ETAH	46,072	0	0	25,649 0 0	The price of cotton was about Rs. 14 per maund during the last hot weather and rains. It rose to Rs. 15-8-0 in October 1867, and sank to Rs. 13-4-0 in January 1868. It again rose about the middle of February to Rs. 19, and the present price is from Rs. 17 to Rs. 18 per maund. The general opinion of the people is that the native cloth manufacture is giving way to the increased demand for English cloth.

JALOUN	39,529	0	0	10,230	0	0	The decrease in out-turn is owing to unusually heavy autumnal rains. The demand for English cloths appears on the decrease. The natives say that cloths of native manufacture are both cheaper and stronger. The prices have, however, much fallen in both, owing to an apparent glut in the market.
JHANSIE	21,591	0	0	13,141	0	0	The area under cotton cultivation in 1867-68 was less than it was the previous year by 4,310 acres. This is attributable to fall in prices from Rs. 20 and Rs. 22 to Rs. 12 and Rs. 13 per maund. There has never been any very large demand for English cloth. All classes of natives seem to prefer native cloth which they find cheaper and more durable than English material. The native manufactures are daily improving, so that the demand for native cloth may be expected to increase in proportion.
LULLUTPORE	994	0	0	376	0	0	The crop was extensively injured by heavy rain. Native cloths have been much less in demand, in consequence of the increasing supply and cheapness of English cloths. The sale of the latter, as compared with the former, is as twelve to four.
				ALLAHABAD DIVISION.
CAWNPORE ...	50,379	0	0	30,176	0	0	The low price of cotton affected the cultivation to a great extent, and the heavy rains, accompanied by blight, reduced the out-turn by about a third. Between the months of January and December 1867, the price of cotton varied between Rs. 16, Rs. 17, and Rs. 18 per maund of 48 seers. Any variation in the Liverpool market has an immediate effect on the Cawnpore market. During March and April 1868, there was great activity in the market, and the whole crop was sold at from Rs. 19 to Rs. 21. The native cloth manufacture remains steadily in the same position.
FUTTEHPORE ..	27,966	0	0	7,280	0	0	The decrease both in the area cultivated and in the produce obtained is owing to continuous heavy rain. The manufacture of native cloth is gradually increasing year by year, and there is every reason to believe that it will continue to increase as long as the English market remains dull.

BANDA	85,582 21 7	31,426 4 2	The decrease in the area cultivated is accounted for by the fall in the price of the staple, and the decrease in the out-turn by the unusually heavy and late rains. The demand for raw cotton has not been so brisk, neither have the prevailing prices been so high as in 1866-67, mainly owing to the inferior quality of the out-turn. The manufacture of native cloth is generally said to have declined, partly on account of the small yield, and also on account of the low prices at which goods of English manufacture are now sold.
ALLAHABAD	22,261 21 8	7,841 8 8	The heavy rains materially reduced the quantity and quality of the crop. There is hardly any difference in the price of the staple from the past year, but the demand for English cotton goods has increased, and the demand for country cotton stuffs has decreased in proportion. Owing to the unfavourable harvest, it is not anticipated that the demand will increase.
HUMEERPORE	36,847 0 0	9,940 0 0	The incessant and heavy rain in 1867-68 was the cause of the decrease in the cultivation and out-turn of the cotton crop. The price of cotton in the Humeerpore markets is mainly regulated by the prices in the Calcutta and Mirzapore markets. The demand for native cloth is at present comparatively inconsiderable,—the price of English cloth, which is generally preferred, being low, and the demand for the latter appears likely to increase still further, and that for native cloth to decrease.
JOUNPORE	559 0 0	349 26 0	This is not a cotton-growing district. The native manufacture of cloth is small, and during the past year is considered to have been smaller than usual, owing to a greater quantity of cloth having been worked up during the year 1866 than the demand for the article required.
		BENARES DIVISION.
GORUCKPORE	3,190 16 0	2,654 15 0	No remarks.
BUSTEE	164 4 4	134 39 0	The crop was injured by rain. Cotton has not as yet succeeded in this district. A little is raised for home consumption, but cloth continues to be imported in large quantities as before, and a good deal of new cotton comes in for barter in the great mart of Mendhawul, with commodities from Eastern Bengal. The demand for cloth will be large this year, in consequence of the general excellence of the harvest.
AZIMGURH	309 2 3	128 25 0	The cultivation of cotton in this district is very limited. What was sown was unfavourably affected by excess of rain. The state of the native cloth manufacture has somewhat improved. There has been a greater demand for native cloth, not only for local consumption, but also for export. The demand is probably attributable to the prosperity of the agricultural classes; but, as the rubbee crop this year has not been a good one, the demand will, it is anticipated, be less during the next year.

MIRZAPORE	2,857 33 0	2,353 29 0	Cotton was sown intermixed with bajrah and similar crops along the bank of the river Ganges, which overflowed and caused much damage to the crop. As the direct trade of Mirzapore is with Calcutta, the fluctuations in the London and Liverpool markets affect Mirzapore prices only by affecting Calcutta prices. Native cloth is manufactured in considerable quantities, but in no instance on a large scale. Only those make use of it who cannot afford to purchase cloth of English make, and nothing but a sensible increase in the price of the latter is likely to increase the demand for the native production.
BENARES	439 0 0	523 25 0	This is not a cotton-growing district. English fabrics are generally preferred to the native coarse manufactures, and it is only the poorest classes who use the latter.

			AJMERE DIVISION.
AJMERE AND MHAIRWARRA ..	25,282 15 0	24,868 32 0	Less cotton was sown this year than last, in consequence of the fall in price of the staple, and the abatement of the extraordinary demand of former years. The average price of cotton is less than in the preceding year by about 14 per cent. The same reasons have operated to diminish the manufacture of native cloth, which has been still further discouraged by an increased introduction of English goods.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 10th September 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

ACT No. XXI OF 1868.

An Act to appoint a Receiver of the property of the late Nawáb of the Carnatic.

Preamble.

WHEREAS certain property belonging to the estate of the late Nawáb of the Carnatic has lately been discovered both in the District of Madras and in the territories of His Highness the Nizám, and it is expedient to appoint a Receiver to collect and administer such property and any other property belonging to the said estate which may hereafter be discovered, or has not hitherto been administered; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Appointment of Receiver of Carnatic property.

1. The Governor of Fort St. George in Council shall appoint such person as he may think fit to act under the orders of the High Court of Judicature at Madras in the administration of the property left by the late Nawáb of the Carnatic and not hitherto collected or administered.

The person so appointed shall have power to collect and take possession of all such property: he shall deal with the same according to the provisions herein contained: he shall give such security (if any) for the due execution of his office as the said Governor in Council may require; and he shall be called "the Receiver of the Carnatic property."

Remuneration of Receiver.

2. The Receiver of the Carnatic property shall be entitled to such commission not exceeding five per centum upon the amount or value of the property collected and distributed under the provisions of this Act as the said Governor in Council shall prescribe. Such commission shall be charged to the estate of the said Nawáb.

Suspension or removal of Receiver.

3. The said Governor in Council may suspend or remove any person appointed such Receiver as aforesaid, and may also from time to time fill up any vacancy in such office occasioned by death, resignation, suspension or removal.

Receiver to represent Nawáb's estate in all proceedings.

4. The Receiver shall represent the estate of the said Nawáb in all proceedings relating thereto; he shall do all acts in performance of his duties by his name of office; and in all legal proceedings he shall be designated by such name.

No proceedings to which the Receiver may be a party shall abate by reason of the death, resignation, suspension or removal from office of any such Receiver, but the same shall be continued by his successor as if no such death, resignation, suspension or removal had occurred.

Receiver to collect Nawáb's property.

5. The Receiver shall have power to collect and take possession of all property, moveable or immoveable, and whether of the nature of State or public property or not, to which the said Nawáb at the time of his death was entitled, and if necessary to sue for and recover the same property, and to realize its value by sale or otherwise.

Conveyance on sale by Receiver of immoveable property.

6. Whenever the said Receiver by the order or with the sanction of the said High Court sells any of the said immoveable property, he shall execute a conveyance thereof to the purchaser.

Every such conveyance shall be valid as against the heirs of the said Nawáb, and all persons claiming under them, and also against all persons claiming under the said Nawáb by virtue of any conveyance or instrument declared by the said Court or by the late Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras to be void as against the creditors of the said Nawáb, or by virtue of any security the benefit of which was barred under the provisions of Act No. XXX of 1858

(to provide for the administration of the estate and for the payment of the debts of the late Nawáb of the Carnatic).

7. Upon any suit being instituted for the administration of the said estate, the said Receiver shall be deemed subject to the orders of the said High Court, and, so far as such orders shall not extend, to the general practice of such Court in the same manner as any other Receiver specially appointed thereby, except that the Court shall not require him to give security.

In case of suit for administration, Receiver to be subject to orders of High Court.

8. This Act shall be deemed to have come into operation on the second day of April 1868, and any person holding the office of Receiver of the Carnatic property immediately before that day shall be deemed to have been appointed on that day under this Act.

Commencement of Act.

WHITLEY STOKES,

Asst. Secy. to the Govt. of India, Home Dept. (Legislative).

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 10th September 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

ACT No. XXII OF 1868.

An Act to bring the Mauza Kheria, in the District of Agra, under the operation of the general Regulations.

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. The Mauza Kheria shall be deemed to be annexed to the District of Agra, and the laws and regulations established for the internal administration of the said District, shall have full force and effect in the said Mauza; and the administration of civil and criminal justice, and the superintendence of the settlement and realization of the public revenue, and of all matters relating to rent in the said Mauza, are hereby vested in the officers for the time being appointed by the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces for the said District of Agra.

Extension to Manzah Kheria of Acts and Regulations in force in District of Agra.

2. This Act shall be deemed to have come into operation on the twenty-sixth day of July 1866.

Commencement of Act.

WHITLEY STOKES,

Asst. Secy. to the Govt. of India, Home Dept. (Legislative).

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 1st September 1868:—

No. 25 OF 1868.

A Bill to legalize Marriages between certain Natives of India not professing the Christian Religion.

WHEREAS marriages between Natives of British India not professing Christianity are held to be illegal unless solemnized in accordance with the rites of some religion recognised by law, and the children of such Natives contracting marriages not solemnized in accordance with the rites aforesaid are held to be illegitimate and incapable of inheriting property; and whereas it is expedient to legalize such marriages when solemnized in accordance with the provisions of this Act; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preamble.

1. This Act may be cited as "The Native Marriage Act, 1868."

Short title.

2. Every marriage between Natives of British India not professing the Christian religion and objecting to be married in accordance with the rites of the Hindú, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Pársí, or Jewish religion, shall be valid—

Conditions of validity of Native marriages.

(1). If it is solemnized in the presence of the Registrar hereinafter mentioned and of at least three credible witnesses, in whose hearing each of the parties makes the following declarations:—

"I, A. B., am a Native of British India. I do not profess the Christian religion, and I object to be married in accordance with the rites of the Hindú, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Pársí or Jewish religion."

"I, A. B., declare in the presence of Almighty God that I take thee C. D. to be my lawful wedded wife [or husband]," or words to that effect:

(2). If the parties are unmarried, and the husband has completed his age of eighteen years, and the wife has completed her age of fourteen years:

(3). If, in case the wife has not completed her age of eighteen years, the consent of her father or guardian has previously been given to the marriage; and

(4). If the parties are not related to each other in any of the degrees prohibited in the first schedule hereto annexed, whether the relationship is legitimate or illegitimate.

3. Every such marriage hereafter solemnized shall, as soon as may be after the solemnization thereof, be certified by such person as the Local Government shall from time to time appoint in this behalf for the District in which the marriage is solemnized. He shall be called the Registrar of Native Marriages, and he may be the Registrar appointed under Act No. XX of 1866 or any other law for the registration of assurances for the time being in force.

Certificate of marriage.

Such certificate shall be in the form contained in the second Schedule to this Act, and shall be signed by (1) the Registrar, (2) the parties to the marriage if both have completed their age of eighteen years, and if the woman has not completed such age, by the husband and by her father or guardian, and (3) by three witnesses present at the marriage.

Fee payable to Registrar.

4. The husband shall pay a fee of two rupees to the Registrar, who shall thereupon enter the certificate in a register to be kept by him for the purpose.

Register to be open to inspection.

Such register shall at all reasonable times be open for inspection, and shall be presumptive evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained. Certified extracts therefrom shall on application be given by the Registrar on the payment to him by the applicant of two rupees for each such extract.

Penalty for failure to subscribe the certificate.

5. Every person required to subscribe or attest such certificate, who wilfully neglects or omits so to do, shall, on conviction of such neglect or omission, be punished by a fine not exceeding rupees one hundred.

Penalty for signing certificates containing false statements.

6. Every person making, signing, or attesting any such certificate containing a statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true, shall be deemed guilty of the offence of forgery as defined in the Indian Penal Code.

Legalization of prior marriages.

7. Every Native of British India described in section 2 who before the passing of this Act, has gone through any ceremony with the intent of thereby contracting marriage shall be deemed to have been married under this Act, if the marriage has been solemnized in the presence of at least three witnesses, and if the conditions specified in section two, clauses two, three and four, have been complied with in the case of such marriage.

Punishment of bigamy.

8. Every person married under this Act who during the lifetime of his or her wife or husband, contracts any marriage without having been lawfully divorced from such wife or husband, shall be subject to the penalties provided in Sections 491 and 495 of the Indian Penal Code for the offence of marrying again during the lifetime of a husband or wife.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 24th September 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information :—

ACT No. XXIII OF 1868.

An Act to give validity to certain Abkárí Rules in British Burma.

Preamble.

WHEREAS Rules for the sale in British Burma of wine, beer, spirituous and fermented liquors and intoxicating drugs, have, from time to time, been made and published under the authority of the Chief Commissioner of British Burma, and it is expedient to give such Rules, as last published under the authority aforesaid, the force of law, and to indemnify all officers, farmers and other persons who have acted under them, or under any such Rules previously published or enforced under the same authority; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Validation of Abkárí Rules published in British Burma Gazette of 29th February 1868.

1. The Rules for the sale of wine, beer, spirituous and fermented liquors, and intoxicating drugs in British Burma, published in the number of the British Burma Gazette dated the twenty-ninth day of February 1868, shall, from the thirty-first day of March 1868 down to the passing of this Act, be deemed to have had the force of law, and shall continue in force until the Governor General of India in Council by notification in the Gazette of India shall otherwise order.

Validation of previous Rules.

2. All other such rules from time to time published or enforced by or by order of the Chief Commissioner of British Burma on or before the said thirty-first day of March 1868, shall be deemed to have had the force of law.

Indemnification of officers and farmers.

3. All officers, farmers and other persons are hereby indemnified for anything done before the passing of this Act, which might lawfully have been done if this Act had been in force; and no suit or other proceeding shall be maintained against any such officer, farmer or other person in respect of anything so done.

[Ratifications exchanged at Vienna, June 26th, 1868.]

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland on the one part, and His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty, on the other part, being equally animated by the desire of extending and promoting the facilities of Navigation between their respective States and Dominions, have resolved to conclude a treaty for that purpose, and have named for their plenipotentiaries, that is to say :—

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Hon'ble John Arthur Douglas, Baron Bloomfield of Oakhampton and Redwood, a Peer of Ireland, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Her Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty; and Louis Mallet, Esquire, Companion of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Assistant Secretary to the Committee of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations;

Ihre Majestät die Königin des vereinigten Königreichs von Grossbritannien und Irland, auf der eine Seite, und Seine Kaiserlich-Königlich Apostolische Majestät auf der anderen Seite, von dem Wunsch beseelt die zwischen Ihren beiderseitigen Staaten und Besitzungen bestehendenden Schifffahrts-Beziehungen wechselseitig zu erleichtern und auszudehnen, haben beschlossen einen Vertrag zu diesem Zwecke einzugehen, und haben zu Ihren Bevollmächtigten ernannt, nämlich:

Ihre Majestät die Königin des vereinigten Königreichs von Grossbritannien und Irland, den sehr ehrenwerthen Johann Arthur Douglas Baron Bloomfield von Oakhampton und Redwood, Pair von Irland, Mitglied Ihrer Brittischen Majestät höchst ehrenwerthen Geheimraths, Grosskreuz des höchst ehrenwerthen Bath-Ordens, Allerhöchst Ihren ausserordentlichen und bevollmächtigten Botschafter bei Seiner Kaiserlich-Königlich Apostolischen Majestät; und den Herrn Louis Mallet, Esquire, Ritter des höchst ehrenwerthen Bath-Ordens, beigeordneten Sekretär des Comité's Ihrer Majestät höchst ehrenwerthen Geheimraths für den Handel und auswärtigen Pflanzstätten;

And His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty, Frederic Ferdinand Baron Beust, His Imperial Majesty's Privy Councillor, Chancellor of the Empire, and Minister of the Imperial House and of Foreign Affairs, Grand Cross of the Orders of St. Stephen and Leopold:

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in due and proper form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

British ships and their cargoes in all the dominions of His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty, and ships belonging to the citizens of the Imperial and Royal States and their cargoes in all the dominions of Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, from whatever place arriving and whatever may be their place of destination, and whatever may be the place of origin or destination of their cargoes, shall be treated in every respect as national ships and their cargoes.

Every favour or exemption in these respects, or any other privilege in matters of Navigation, which either of the Contracting Parties shall grant to a third Power, shall be extended immediately and unconditionally to the other Party.

It is, however, agreed that this stipulation shall not be applicable to the national fisheries of either of the two countries.

ARTICLE II.

The stipulations contained in the preceding Article are also to be applied to the Colonies and Foreign Possessions of Her Britannic Majesty, as well as to the ships and cargoes of the same; but as regards the coasting trade, only in those Colonies and Foreign Possessions the coasting trade of which shall have been, or shall be hereafter, opened to foreign ships in conformity with the Acts of Parliament which govern this matter.

The Foreign Possessions and Colonies of Her Britannic Majesty, the coasting trade of which has been already so opened to foreign ships, and in which therefore ships belonging to the citizens of the Imperial and Royal States are placed on the national footing, are:—

British India.	Victoria.
Ceylon.	St. Lucia.
Cape of Good Hope.

ARTICLE III.

If any ship of war or merchant-vessel of one of the Contracting Parties should run aground or be wrecked, or meet with any casualty upon the coasts of the other, the same aid and assistance shall be rendered to it, and to the cargo, apparel, and furniture thereof, as to a national vessel; and in such case no other expenses shall be paid by the owners or their agents and representatives for the preservation of the property or of the lives of the persons on board the ship, than would be payable in the like case of a wreck or of casualty to a national vessel.

Seine Kaiserlich-Königliche Apostolische Majestät, den Herrn Friedrich Ferdinand Freiherrn von Beust, Allerhöchst Ihren Geheimen Rath, Reichskanzler und Minister des Hauses und der Auswärtigen Angelegenheiten, Grosskreuz des St. Stefan und des Leopold-Ordens:

Welche, nach gegenseitiger Mittheilung ihrer in guter und gehöriger form befundenen Vollmachten, die nachstehenden Artikel vereinbart und abgeschlossen haben:—

ARTIKEL I.

Britische Schiffe und deren Ladungen sollen in allen Besitzungen Seiner Kaiserlich-Königlich Apostolischen Majestät, und Schiffe von Angehörigen der Staaten Seiner Kaiserlich-Königlich Apostolischen Majestät und deren Ladungen in allen Besitzungen Ihrer Majestät der Königin des vereinigten Königreichs von Grossbritannien und Irland, gleichwiel woher die Schiffe kommen, oder wohin sie gehen, und woher die Ladungen kommen, oder wohin sie bestimmt sind, in jeder Beziehung wie die einheimischen Schiffe und deren Ladungen behandelt werden.

Jede Begunstigung oder Befreiung in dieser Beziehung, so wie jedes andere die Schifffahrt betreffende Privilegium, welches einer der vertragenden Theile einer dritten Macht gewähren würde, soll augenblichlich und bedingungslos auf den anderen Theil ausgedehnt werden.

Man ist jedoch darüber einverstanden, dass diese Bestimmung auf die nationale Fischerei beidertheile keine Anwendung finden soll.

ARTIKEL II.

Die in dem vorstehenden Artikel enthaltenen Bestimmungen finden auch auf die Kolonien und auswärtigen Besitzungen Ihrer Brittischen Majestät, sowie auf deren Schiffe und Ladungen anwendung, jedoch was die Kustenschifffahrt betrifft, nur in jenen Kolonien und auswärtigen Besitzungen deren Kustenchifffahrt in Gemässheit der über den gegenstand ergangenen Parlamentsakten fremden Schiffen geöffnet ist, oder in zukunft eröffnet werden sollte.

Die auswärtigen Besitzungen und Kolonien Ihrer Brittischen Majestät deren Kustenschifffahrt fremden Schiffen bereits geöffnet wurde, und in welchen desshalb Schiffe von angehörigen der Kaiserlich-Königlichen Staaten, wie die eigenen behandelt werden, sind:

Britisch Indien.	Victoria.
Ceylon.	St. Lucia.
Cap der Guten Hoffnung.

ARTIKEL III.

Wenn ein Kriegs-oder Handelsschiff eines der beiden vertragenden Theile an den Kusten des anderen Schiffbruch oder Havarie oder irgend einen Unfall erleiden solte, so soll ihm, so wie seiner Ladung, seinen Geräthen, und seiner Ausrüstung derselbe Schutz und Beistand geleistet werden, wie einem einheimischen Schiffe; auch sollen in einem solchen Falle von den Eigenthümern, deren bevollmächtigten oder Vertretern für die Sicherung ihres Eigenthums oder des Lebens der an Bord befindlichen Personen keine anderen Kosten zu bezahlen sein, als in dem entsprechenden Falle des Schiffbruches oder des Unfalles eines einheimischen Schiffes zu zahlen sein würden.

In case the master of a merchant-vessel should be under the necessity of disposing of a part of his merchandize in order to defray any salvage expenses, no impediment shall be opposed by the authorities, the master being bound, however, to conform to the existing regulations and tariffs.

The goods and merchandise saved from the wreck shall be exempt from all duties of Customs, unless cleared for consumption.

The respective Consuls General, Consuls, Vice Consuls, and Consular Agents shall, if the owner or master, or other agent of the owner, is not present, or is present and requires it, or is bound by the laws of his country to accept Consular assistance, be authorized to interpose in order to afford the necessary assistance to those concerned.

Article IV.

The Consuls General, Consuls, Vice Consuls, and Consular Agents of each of the Contracting Parties residing in the Dominions and Possessions of the other, shall receive from the local authorities such assistance as can by law be given to them for the recovery of deserters from the vessels of their respective countries.

Article V.

All vessels which according to British law are to be deemed British vessels, and all vessels which, according to the laws prevailing in the States of His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty, are to be deemed vessels belonging to the subjects of His Imperial and Royal Apostolic Majesty, shall, for the purposes of this Treaty, be respectively deemed British vessels, and vessels belonging to the citizens of the Imperial and Royal States.

Article VI.

The present Treaty shall remain in force from the exchange of the ratifications thereof until the 31st December 1877; and in case neither of the High Contracting Powers shall have notified to the other, twelve months before the expiration of the said period, the intention to put an end to its operation, the Treaty shall continue in force for another year, and so on from year to year, until the expiration of a year counting from the day on which one or other of the High Contracting Parties shall have announced its intention to put an end to it.

Article VII.

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Vienna, within eight weeks, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Done at Vienna, this 30th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight.

(L. S.) BLOOMFIELD.

(L. S.) LOUIS MALLET.

Sollte der Führer eines Handelsschiffes genöthigt sein, einen Theil seiner Ladung zur Deckung von Rettungskosten zu verkaufen, so soll ihm von Seite der Behörden kein Hinderniss in den Weg gelegt werden; der Führer ist jedoch zur Beachtung der bestehenden Vorschriften und tarife verpflichtet.

Die von dem Wrak geborgenen Güter und Waaren sollen, soferne sie nicht in den Verbrauch übergehen, von jeder Zollabgabe frei sein.

Wenn der Eigenthümer oder der Schiffsführer, oder ein anderer Bevollmächtigter des Eigenthümers nicht gegenwärtig ist, oder gegenwärtig ist, und es wünscht, oder zur Annahme des Consular-Beistandes durch seine Heimaths-Gesetzgebung verpflichtet ist, sollen die beiderseitigen General-Consuln, Vice-Consuln, oder Consular-Agenten befugt sein, die Gewährung des erforderlichen Beistandes an die Betheiligten zu vermitteln.

Artikel IV.

Den General-Consuln, Consuln, Vice-Consuln, und Consular-Agenten jedes der vertragenden Theile, welche in dem Gebiete und den Besitzungen des anderen ihren Sitz haben, soll von den Ortsbehörden jeder gesetzlich zulässige Beistand zur Einbringung der von den Schiffen ihres Landes desertirten Personen geleistet werden.

Artikel V.

Alle Schiffe welche nach Brittischen Gesetzen als Brittische Schiffe, und alle Schiffe welche nach den Gesetzen der Staaten Seiner Kaiserlich-Königlichen Apostolischen Majestät als Schiffe von angehörigen dieser Staaten anzusehen sind, sollen in allen Beziehungen dieses Vertrages als Brittische, beziehungsweise als Schiffe von angehörigen der Kaiserlich-Königlichen Staaten gelten.

Artikel VI.

Gegenwärtiger Vertrag soll vom Tage der Auswechslung der Ratificationen desselben bis zum 31 Dezember 1877, in Kraft bleiben, und falls kein der hohen kontra hirenden Mächte der anderen zwölf Monate vor Ablauf des besagten Zeitraums die absicht Kundgegeben haben wird, die Wirksamkeit des Vertrages aufhören zu lassen, soll der Vertrag für ein weiteres Jahr in Wirksamkeit bleiben, und sofort von Jahr zu Jahr bis zum Ablaufe eines Jahres, von dem Tage an gerechnet, an welchem der eine oder der andere der hohen kontrahirenden Theile seine absicht kundgemacht haben wird, der Wirksamkeit desselben ein Ende zu setzen.

Artikel VII.

Gegenwärtiger Vertrag soll ratifizirt, und es sollen die Ratifications-Urkunden in Wien, binnen acht Wochen, oder wenn möglich früher, ausgewechselt werden.

Zu Urkund dessen haben die beiderseitigen Bevollmächtigten denselben unterzeichnet und ihre Siegel beigedrückt.

So geschehen zu Wien, am 30 Tage des Monats April, im Jahre des Heiles Achtzehnhundert sechzig und acht.

MILITARY. INDIA OFFICE;
No. 280. London, 20th August 1868.

To His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council.

SIR,—I have considered in Council your letter No. 180 of 30th May last, inquiring how a Deputy Inspector General of Hospitals, who may be compelled by ill health to take leave to England beyond six months during his five years' tenure of office, is to become entitled to the special pension of £250.

2. In reply I have to observe that, although an active service in India of five years, including six months' leave on medical certificate, is required in that rank for the pension in question, and although on the expiration of five years' service on full pay, inclusive of all leave, as an acting or permanent Deputy Inspector General of Hospitals, an Officer vacates the appointment, such Officer is, under the regulations of the service, eligible for re-appointment for a second tour of duty, at the discretion of Government, if not disqualified by age.

3. If disqualified from this or any other cause, and if he has not served the full five years required for the extra pension, his claim to that pension will be forfeited.

TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

NOTIFICATION.

Simla, the 20th September 1868.

Experimental Tariff and Rules.

The following experimental Tariff, and Rules adopted, as far as practicable, from those of the Paris Convention, have received the Approval of the Government of India, and will come into force on the 1st of October 1868.

Acceptance of messages.

1. Messages must be in the Roman character, and legibly written.

2. The body of the message must be preceded by the address, and followed by the signature.

3. The address must contain all the information necessary to insure the delivery of the message at its destination.

4. Messages may be written in the ordinary English language, in cypher, in words of concealed meaning commonly called "Code," or in any foreign language written in the Roman character.

5. Messages in ordinary language can contain no unusual combinations, abbreviations, or constructions, nor words of more than seven syllables.

Charges. Messages in ordinary language.

6. The charge for a message in ordinary English language between any two stations in India or Burmah, will be ONE RUPEE FOR EVERY TEN WORDS.

Messages in cypher, in words of concealed meaning, or in a foreign language.

7. The charge for a message in cypher, in words of concealed meaning, or in a foreign language, will be TWO RUPEES FOR EVERY TEN WORDS. These messages are always repeated back by the receiving Office, to ensure the greatest possible accuracy.

Night messages and messages on Sundays and holidays.

8. A double charge will be levied upon all messages tendered for transmission between the hours of 18 (6 P.M.) and 6 A.M., also on Sundays, and the following holidays:—

Christmas Day, New Year's Day, Good Friday, and the Queen's Birthday.

Messages to or from Ceylon.

9. In addition to the above, two Rupees and eight annas will be charged for each group of 20 words sent to or from any station in Ceylon, and a half rate, one Rupee four annas, for every additional 10 words or fraction of 10 words in excess of 20.

Foregoing rates not applicable to Indo-European messages.

10. These rates do not apply to Indo-European messages which, for the present, will remain unaltered.

Name of sending station telegraphed free of charge.

11. All that the sender writes in his message to be transmitted, is included in the cost. The name of the Telegraph Station from whence it is despatched is added free by the Department, and need not be written by the sender.

Day, hour and minute of receipt of a message into a station for despatch, telegraphed free of charge.

12. The day, hour and minute of receipt of a message into a Telegraph Office for transmission is, in every instance, added by the Department, form the concluding words of the text of the message, and are telegraphed free of charge. Senders may, however, date their messages if they think fit; but the sender's date, if inserted, will be charged for, and, to avoid confusion, will, if given at the end, be transferred to the beginning of the text of the message.

Words joined by a hyphen.

13. Words joined by a hyphen are counted as so many separate words.

Words separated by an apostrophe.

14. Words separated by an apostrophe are counted as so many separate words.

Proper names counting as one word. Proper names, &c., otherwise counted.

15. Proper names of towns and persons, names of places and streets, count as one word. Titles, Christian names, particles and qualifications are counted for the number of words employed to express them.

Every separate character including an underline, charged as a word.

16. Every separate character, whether letter or figure, is counted as a word. The same applies to an underline.

Signs which the instruments express by a single signal are not charged. Signs which count as a figure.

17. Signs which the instruments express by a single signal (signs of punctuation, hyphens, apostrophes, inverted commas, parenthesis, fresh paragraph) are not counted. But decimal points, commas and bars of division used with figures are each counted as a figure.

Numbers expressed in figures reckoned at five figures to a word.

18. Numbers expressed in Figures are counted at the rate of five figures to a word, plus one word for any excess.

Charge for re-addressing a message.

19. Should the addressee of a message leave the station to which it is addressed, and it be sent on by telegraph to some other station, an additional charge of one Rupee for every 10 words of message in ordinary English language, and of two Rupees for every 10 words of message not in ordinary English language, must be paid by the addressee for every extra address before the telegram is delivered to him.

Messages delivered free within five miles of the Telegraph Station. Messages to be forwarded on by post must be registered.

20. Peons will deliver messages free of charge at any place within 5 miles of the Telegraph Station. Beyond this distance, messages will be sent either by post registered (the fee being prepaid), or by such other means as the sender may arrange, and pay for at the Booking Station.

21. Any additional words that may be necessary to explain the delivery of a message when its destination is more than 5 miles beyond the nearest Telegraph Station, will be considered as part of the message and charged for accordingly.

General instructions. Messages to be legibly written.

22. Senders of messages are advised to write their messages in an unmistakeable and distinct hand, and to use the shortest and most familiar words they can select. The more intelligible the message, the greater is the probability of its being correctly transmitted.

Authentication of corrections necessary.

23. Every interlineation, reference, erasure or alteration of words should be authenticated by the sender of the message, or by his representative.

Verification of private messages may be insisted upon.

The sender of a private message can always be called upon to prove that the signature attached to it is genuine.

Registered messages.

24. The sender of any message has the power of registering it.

Charge for registering.

25. The charge for registering is equal to the charge for the message.

Copy of the message as delivered to the addressee is telegraphed to the sender of a registered message.

26. When a message is registered, the delivering station transmits by telegraph to the sender, an integral reproduction of the copy sent to the receiver, followed by a double notice of the exact time of delivery, and of the person to whom it was delivered.

If delivery not effected, a notice to that effect is sent to the sender.

27. If it be impossible to effect delivery, this double notice is replaced by an advice of the circumstances which prevented the delivery, and if possible, by the information necessary to enable the sender to cause the message to reach its destination.

The return message has priority over others.

28. The return message has priority in transmission over other messages of the same rank.

The return message can be sent to any station.

29. The sender of a registered message can have the return message addressed to him at any station, by giving the necessary instructions, as also when prepaying a reply.

Words necessary to convey instructions, must be paid for.

The words necessary to convey these instructions will be considered as part of the message, and charged for accordingly.

Refunds.

No refund will be made unless the message be registered.

30. No refund will be made for a message delivered wholly or partially in an unintelligible state, unless it be registered; but the public are invited to submit complaints to the Check Office, Calcutta.

31. If a registered message be delayed or mutilated to such an extent as to be manifestly unable to fulfil its object, the whole charge made for it will be returned to the sender.

Limit, to 200 words.

32. No message or messages of more than 200 words in all can be sent at one time by any private individual or firm, and no second message by the same individual or firm till after the lapse of three hours, unless the line be free and not required by any one else.

Multiple messages charged as separate messages.

33. A message addressed to several persons or to the same person in localities where delivery is to be effected by different Offices, is charged for as so many separate messages.

Multiple messages charged as one message.

34. A message addressed to several persons in one locality, or to the same person at several places of residence, with or without re-transmission by post, is charged for as a single message; but a copying fee of four annas, independently of postage if any, is charged for each destination after the first.

Copying fee of four annas.

Certified copies of messages will be furnished, and a charge of four annas made for each copy.

35. The sender and receiver of a message have a right to be furnished with certified true copies of the messages sent or received by them: a fixed charge of four annas is made for every copy furnished.

Messages must be prepaid.

36. With the following exception, all charges for messages must be prepaid in cash or in stamps.

Messages sent "bearing" from seaports.

37. Messages are sent "bearing" from seaports when received by mail steamers or other vessels for despatch, but no message, prepaid or "bearing," will be received for transmission until the name of the vessel has been made known. "Bearing" messages will not be delivered to the addressees until payment has been obtained.

Objectionable messages, to be refused acceptance.

38. Telegraph Masters are required to refuse to transmit a message which may be of a decidedly objectionable or alarming character. Should the character of the message be disputed, the matter may be referred to a Secretary to Government if the dispute occur at the seat of Government, or to the Chief Civil Officer if at a provincial station.

Provisions to secure secrecy.

39. To secure secrecy as much as possible, all persons, including officers of the Department not actually on duty, are strictly prohibited from entering the signal-room. Breach of the regulation renders an offender liable to a fine of Rs. one hundred under Act VIII. of 1860.

Penalty for violation of secrecy.

40. Violation of secrecy on the part of any person in the Department will be punished by dismissal from office, forfeiture of arrears of pay, and a declaration in the official Gazette of the incapacity of the delinquent to serve the Government in any capacity. Breach of this rule renders the offender liable to the further punishment of fine, or to imprisonment with or without labor not exceeding two years, or to both. It is a violation of secrecy to mention the fact that a message has been received or despatched by any particular person or firm.

Payment for service message.

41. Service messages from all public functionaries must be paid* for in cash or in stamps prior to despatch: the rates are the same for service messages as those charged to private individuals.

Service messages take their turn of despatch with private messages.

42. Service messages have no right of precedence, and take their turn of despatch with private messages, except in cases of pressing public emergency and importance, when priority may be claimed on special grounds.

"Clear the line" messages.

43. On certain emergent occasions of great importance, the public functionaries named below have the power of "clearing the line," that is, to suspend the receipt and despatch of all other messages until the one for which the line is "cleared" is passed on :—

* The only exceptions to this rule are enumerated in special printed instructions issued to each Office.

Authorities having power to "clear the line."

The Governor General of India;

The Governors of Madras, Bombay, and Ceylon;

Commanders-in-Chief, India, Madras, and Bombay;

Lieutenant Governors of Bengal, North-Western Provinces, and Punjab;

Secretaries to the Government of India;

Secretaries to the Governments of Madras, Bombay, Bengal, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab;

Chief Commissioners of Oudh, the Central Provinces, and British Burmah;

Commissioner of Sind;

Director General of Telegraphs in India;

The Resident at Hyderabad (Deccan).

"Clear the line" messages to be paid for.

The messages so sent are, however, to be paid for in cash or in stamps as other service messages.

No unpaid message to be despatched under penalty.

44. No unpaid message, except those specified in the Departmental Regulations, shall on any account be transmitted. A violation of this rule will subject the Signaller or Telegraph Master in charge of the station from which a message is improperly sent, to dismissal from the public service.

Office hours.

45. Telegraph Stations are divided into three classes—

1st.—Those performing permanent day and night duty;

2nd.—Those performing full day duty;

3rd.—Those of limited day duty.

Stations in the 1st Class are always open day and night for the reception and transmission of messages.

Stations of the 2nd Class are open from 7 A. M. till 9 P. M.

Stations of the 3rd Class from 8 A. M. till 10 A. M., from noon till 3 P. M., and from 4 P. M. till 6 P. M.

Hours of business limited on Sundays and holidays.

46. All Offices will be closed to the public between the hours of 8 and 16 on Sunday, Christmas Day, New Year's Day, Good Friday, and the Queen's birthday.

Exemptions in favour of emergent business signed by competent authority.

47. In cases of life and death, or of extraordinary political emergency, a message countersigned by the Chief Civil Authority at a station, or by any of the authorities empowered to "clear the line," can be sent from any Office at any time.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

NATIVE FEMALE EDUCATION IN INDIA.

Despatch from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, to His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council,—(Educational), No. 17, dated 12th August 1868.

SIR,—The despatch of your Excellency in Council, dated 30th May, No. 6 of 1868, on the subject of the establishment of Female Normal Schools in the three Presidency towns of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, has been considered by me in Council.

2. Your Excellency in Council has determined to give the experiment of female education in India a fair trial, by assigning to each of the Governments of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, an annual sum of Rs. 12,000 for five years, for the establishment of Female Normal Schools in the three Presidency towns. Your Excellency in Council considers that, in a cause in which success so greatly depends on the exertions of the Native community, the sum above-mentioned constitutes an adequate contribution on the part of the State.

3. I entirely concur in the views of your Excellency in Council, and approve of the proceedings reported in your despatch. I desire that the most careful attention may be paid to this experiment while in progress, and that I may, from time to time, be kept informed as to the results which may be achieved.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME AND PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENTS.

ANTICIPATED SCARCITY IN UPPER INDIA, AND THE MANNER OF DEALING WITH THE EMERGENCY WHICH MAY ARISE.

Resolution by the Government of India, Home Department,—(Nos. 3845—3854, dated 22nd September 1868.)

OBSERVATIONS.—The Governor General in Council has received with much concern the reports of the Lieutenant Governors of the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab, and of the Chief Commissioners of Oudh and the Central Provinces, regarding the scanty fall of rain during the last three months. The latest accounts show that heavy rain has fallen in the western districts of the North-West Provinces and Oudh during the last few days, but the deficiency of rain seems to threaten a serious or even complete failure of the khureef or autumn crops in many parts of northern India. His Excellency in Council has already intimated to the Local Governments and Administrations that he will cordially support them in carrying out all measures of relief which they may deem requisite, should the present fears for the safety of the khureef harvest unfortunately prove well founded; and His Excellency in Council has stated that a further expression of his views would be communicated to them upon the general course which it may become proper to pursue.

2. The first consideration which arises is that the Government must be prepared not only for the misfortune which now seems impending in some districts, the more or less complete loss of the khureef crop, but for the far more serious calamity of a failure of the rain in September and October, and the consequent loss of the ensuing rubbee or spring crop also. It seems probable from past experience that if the season is favourable for sowing the rubbee, and good winter rains follow, prices will not very greatly rise after the end of the year; that the distress caused by the failure of the khureef will have become severe in November or thereabouts, and that from the present time till then the pressure will gradually increase. But if there should further be a failure of the September and October rains, and the rubbee sowings be lost, preparation must be made for a great calamity, the intensity of which cannot be expected to cease till the first falls of the summer rain of the coming year towards the end of June 1869, and may even be prolonged for a further period.

3. It must be remembered that the harvests of last year are believed to have been unusually good in most districts, and that under no circumstances could the crops of the present khureef have come into the market till November, nor could the rubbee crop of next year come forward for consumption till May of next year. There is, therefore, reason to hope that the pressure from a failure of the food crops is not in any case likely to be very suddenly developed, and that time may be allowed for the supply of a supplementary stock from other parts of India, if the scarcity becomes intense in the North-West. The existence of the railway, which will very shortly be opened through between Calcutta and Lahore and Mooltan, will assuredly add in a most important degree to the facilities for importing the wanting grain for Upper India, and this gives an additional ground for hoping that, should the worst happen, so far as a failure of the rain is concerned, yet the actual rigour of the resulting scarcity may not be so aggravated as on former like occasions.

Comparing the condition of affairs in 1860 with that of the present time, it is worthy of remark that in 1860 prices began to rise after June, and that in August, in the upper part of the Doab, wheat was selling for about 11 and 12 seers for the Rupee, and that the price never rose so high as 8 seers per Rupee. The last accounts show that in the upper part of the North-West Provinces, the price of wheat is still about 20 seers per Rupee, which is not greatly above the average of the last eight months. This seems to prove that the stock of wheat is now far larger than it was in 1860. The rise in the price of jowar and bajra, the chief food of the agricultural population, has, however, been much greater, being in July about double what it was in January. The extension of irrigation from the canals of the Doab and the Delhi territory, which has been steadily going on for many years past, must have greatly increased the available stock of food both for men and cattle; and everything has been and will be done, during the present and coming seasons, to obtain the greatest general advantage from the available supply of water. The increase of irrigation due to the Ganges Canal alone since the famine of 1860-61 is about 300,000 acres, so that the area irrigated by this canal has nearly doubled.

4. The conclusion that the Governor General in Council draws from these reflections is, that there is still a period of about two months available for making preparations to meet what may be a very terrible calamity. That in or before November next, it will in all probability be possible to form a fair judgment from the amount of rain which may have fallen in September and October as to the prospects of the rubbee, and that then the Government will know whether the danger has passed, or whether it has to make provision for the worst. If the khureef only fails, the loss will in a great degree fall on the crops which give food for cattle, and the pressure on the people may probably be efficiently relieved by the employment which may be given them by the public works commonly in prosecution in the several districts. Great distress is not perhaps likely to arise unless the rubbee sowings fail, and then not long before the end of the year; but if the rubbee fails, the scarcity will probably continue in a very severe form at least till the end of June 1869.

5. In proceeding to consider the manner in which the Government should act if severe scarcity arises, His Excellency in Council would first most earnestly impress upon all persons in authority the necessity for not permitting the smallest interference with the ordinary operations of trade during the continuance of the scarcity. On this subject the following extract from a paper drawn up in 1861 by Mr. J. Strachey, then Collector of Moradabad, may be regarded as expressing the views of the Government of India at the present time:—

There is one other point connected with this part of the question to which it is desirable to refer. The Government has already publicly expressed its disapproval of all interference by its officers with the object of reducing the price of food. I believe that orders still more strong and explicit would be useful. Unfortunately, public education in these matters is at a miserably low ebb. In times of difficulty, like the present, almost every Magistrate is constantly urged, both by Englishmen and by Natives, to interfere, in some way or other, for the purpose of cheapening food, or of rendering it easier of access to the consumers. Reports frequently become prevalent that in some part of the country such interference has been actually practised. Whether these reports be true or false, they are extremely mischievous. The determination of Government to allow no such interference ought to be so notorious, that reports of this kind shall obtain no credence. These rumours are the more readily believed, because they fall in with the general idea of what is proper and probable. The mere suspicion of any interference of the kind is sufficient to check the speculations of the corn-merchants, and it cannot be doubted that this is a cause which often, in this country, has the effect of stopping the exportation of grain from distant markets.

It cannot be too clearly borne in mind that in time of extreme famine, when it is impossible to supply the deficiency of food by importation, the main safeguard against general starvation is the reduction of consumption, and that this can only be effectually brought about by a rise of prices. The grain-dealer, therefore, while he works for his own personal advantage by raising the price of food as it becomes scarce, is in fact providing the means for securing the community against the extremity of famine, and his action, so far from being, as it is too often ignorantly described to be, that of a public enemy, is much more that of a public benefactor.

6. Another point of great importance is that there should be no appearance or suggestion of Government interference in the introduction of grain, unless under most exceptional circumstances, which, so far as the Governor General in Council at present sees, can hardly arise in the districts of the plains. The experience of the famine in Orissa may possibly be brought forward as an argument for direct Government interposition on the present occasion. But the analogy of that case should not be permitted to lead to any disregard of the true principles which it is important to observe. To quote again from the paper before noticed—

There is no want of private speculation engaged in bringing grain from other districts. The actual quantity of food imported, although insufficient, is still very large, and any attempt by the Government to import grain upon its own account, or any interference with the operations of private traders, could hardly fail to be mischievous. "Direct measures," says Mr. J. S. Mill, "at the cost of the State, to procure food from a distance are expedient when, from peculiar reasons, the thing is not likely to be done by private speculation. In any other case they are a great error. Private speculators will not, in such cases, venture to compete with the Government, and though a Government can do more than any one merchant, it cannot do nearly so much as all merchants."

The true limitation of the action of Government in this respect is here given. So soon as the Government is satisfied that private trade is manifestly inadequate for the introduction of grain into the suffering districts in sufficient quantity, then the analogy to the position of Orissa will be established, but not till then. The case of severe scarcity in the hill districts of Kumaon and Gurhwal, in which the means of communication are extremely bad, and where there is virtually no internal commerce except on the very smallest scale, is one in which the direct action of Government in importing grain has on former occasions been exercised, and would, under the rule above laid down, be fully justified. But judging from past experience, it may safely be assumed that the enterprise of individuals will, in the open districts of the plains, no more fail on this occasion than it has failed before under similar circumstances. The probabilities are altogether in an opposite direction. The greatly increased facilities for cheap transport given by the railways now open will do much to stimulate the activity of trade, and to draw into the impoverished districts supplies from a distance in a manner not before possible.

The Governor General in Council desires to point out in a marked manner that during the calamity of 1860-61, Sir G. Edmonstone, the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces, allowed no Government interference of any description with the grain trade, and left the supply of food to the ordinary operations of the commercial community with most satisfactory results. It is apparent from the known facts that in that year, so far as the means of communication and transport available admitted, the import of food on a very large scale commenced as soon as the scarcity declared itself in a distinct form, and that the imports continued until the pressure ceased.

While therefore the only safe general rule will be to exercise no direct interference with the supply of grain, it will yet be most important to watch the condition of the markets, and to ascertain as exactly as possible the amount of the importations and the quarters from which the supplies are received. If an extreme condition of want arise, it may be right to enquire whether aid could be obtained from any of the more distant markets to which the action of private trade had not reached, and in the last resort the co-operation of the Government as an importer might be desirable. But these are contingencies on which a correct judgment can only be formed as the occasion actually arises.

7. It may be useful, in illustration of the powers of traders to deal with great operations such as the feeding of a population of millions, to observe that it is a fact beyond question that the present normal condition of England in respect to the supply of grain for the food of the people cannot be less unfavourable, if the imports from foreign countries are disregarded, than that in which a province of India is placed in a time of famine. The true difference in the two cases is, that in England a very active and enterprising commerce has been established, involving the use of a large capital by means of which the wants of the country are most closely watched and met as they arise. The foundation of such a commerce is without doubt to be traced to the advanced intelligence of the people as much as to their greater wealth, and to the far superior means of external and internal communication. An accurate knowledge of the real stock of food in the country, and of the quantity required to meet the wants of the people, must always be of essential value in leading to the establishment of a commerce of this sort on a satisfactory footing. In India unfortunately, the means of obtaining such knowledge are singularly small, and there is hardly any other test for ascertaining the stock of grain remaining than the current price in the markets.

8. The publication of the prices of grain and other articles of food at short intervals has on former occasions been suggested, and this measure will again be worthy of adoption. In attending to this, all practicable precautions should be taken to ensure that the returns represent fairly the actual market rates of the commodities named. It is known that in many cases the official price currents have been very unreliable. Further, the movements of grain by the railway, or on the chief lines of road, or by water, so far as the information can be got without exciting suspicion of the motives of the Government, might also with great advantage be recorded and published at short intervals.

9. Passing next to the more detailed consideration of the system to be followed in giving relief, it may first be remarked that so far as it is possible, a labour test should be insisted on. But it will be right to make a distinction between the able-bodied and the persons who are from any cause unfit for ordinary labour. It will by no means invariably follow that one labour test will be properly applicable to all persons alike. To require that those who cannot usefully be employed on public works should submit to such labour as a preliminary condition to receiving relief, is neither humane, nor expedient. As far as possible, those who are able to labour on public works should be separated from the remainder, and for the latter, relief might more suitably be provided in poor-houses organized on the sort of system adopted at Moradabad and other places in 1860-61. Persons relieved at poor-houses would be set to do whatever work was best suited to their habits or physical powers. Only in extreme cases would relief be given without some labour. The system of aiding the poorest class of females, of such social position that they cannot be induced to resort to a poor-house, which was adopted at Moradabad, may also be made to serve a very useful purpose.

10. On these subjects the following extract from the report by Mr. J. Strachey may be usefully added :—

It is not possible to look upon human suffering from an economical point of view alone. If we can save people from present starvation, we must do so, although the measures that we adopt may add to the difficulties of the rest of the community, and may bring with them evils which cannot be avoided. But the dispensers of public and private charity ought distinctly to acknowledge those evils, and strive to reduce them to a minimum. "The problem," as Mr. J. S. Mill says regarding Poor Laws, "is how to give the greatest amount of needful help with the smallest encouragement to undue reliance on it." Whether relief be given in the shape of simple charity, or in return for labour performed upon public works for the Government, the relief must be no greater than can be helped. It must be remembered that I am now assuming the existence of absolute famine and an actual deficiency of food. These conditions being granted, it is better, although it seems hard to say so, that we should give somewhat too little than too much.

The relief must never, even in times of less extreme pressure, be so lavish that the objects of our charity are placed in a better position than that held by those who are managing to support themselves by their independent exertions. Otherwise, the honest endeavours of the poor will be checked, and they will be encouraged to place their dependence on something far less really able to help them than their own determination. As the expenditure of money and of food increases, so will the prices of food continue to rise; the circle of distress will go on constantly widening; the poor who had not desisted from their labors, and who had not been tempted by the hope of obtaining better wages on the Government works than they could obtain for themselves, will be compelled by the high price of food to abandon their own exertions for their own support. "The first and most essential of all conditions of relief," say the English Poor Law Commissioners, "is that the situation of the pauper, upon the whole, should not be made really or apparently so eligible as the situation of the independent laborer of the lowest class. As the condition of the pauper class is elevated, the condition of the independent class will be depressed, their industry impaired, their employment rendered unsteady, and its remuneration diminished. Such persons, therefore, are under the strongest inducements to quit the less eligible class of laborers, and enter the more eligible class of paupers."

The general principles upon which public charity ought to be afforded are equally applicable to the able-bodied and to the infirm. It is a great mistake to suppose, as people have often done during the present scarcity, that every person apparently unable to work is a fit object for charity. The evils of indiscriminate private charity are universally admitted, but indiscriminate public charity is far worse; and it is the more injurious because it is the public recognition of a false and mischievous principle.

The rule laid down by the Government that the able-bodied poor shall receive relief only in return for labor, was evidently the first essential of a reasonable system. But it is often difficult in practice to draw the line between those who are and those who are not able-bodied. Public works, undertaken by the Government, cannot, whatever be the scale of operations, give relief to all who require it. This is specially the case when, as at the present time, the chief sufferers belong to the non-agricultural classes. Many are incapable of working on roads and canals, who would be able to perform a fair amount of labor, if employed in the ordinary occupations to which they have been accustomed. Many are physically unfit for out-door work, who are well able to perform work of a sedentary kind. This is the case with great numbers of women, and especially with those who have young children from whom they cannot be separated. It is useless to attempt to make people perform work for which they are altogether unfit. Not only is the result failure with respect to them, but they render it difficult to obtain a fair amount of work from the others associated with them, who are really able, and who might be willing to work. If, for example, there be a hundred applicants for relief, all of whom are capable of performing some kind of work, and out of this number only fifty are really fit for employment in road-making, only those fifty should be so employed. The remaining fifty ought to be employed in some other way; even if the employment be unprofitable, the loss will usually not be so great as under the other system. In times, therefore, of great distress, it becomes necessary, in addition to undertaking public works, to establish properly organized poor-houses, which shall be at the same time, strictly speaking, work-houses. Owing to the extreme cheapness and simplicity of the mechanical appliances required for carrying on the commoner Indian manufactures, this is not so difficult as it might be supposed to be.

11. The able-bodied who are fairly fit for out-door labour should alone be employed on public works. When it becomes necessary to undertake such works for the relief of the people on a great scale, they should, as far as possible, be set on foot, not in the districts where the distress is greatest, but in some other localities better provided with food. On this subject Mr. J. Strachey further remarks:—

It must be admitted that the importation of food in quantity sufficient to supply completely a deficiency of production, is, in times of actual famine, impracticable in most of the districts of these Provinces. The only thing that remains which can afford relief is a reduction of consumption. We have in possession a certain limited quantity of food, and the object to be aimed at is that this food shall be economised to the utmost, and be made available for the greatest possible number of persons.

Up to a certain point, this object is gained by mere increase in the price of food, but this increase, although in itself necessary and beneficial, involves, when it becomes extreme, the starvation or misery of thousands. The difficulties of the position are great. On the one hand there are multitudes of people who must be saved, if it be possible to save them. On the other hand, we have to bear in mind that while we are giving food to the starving, we are diminishing the general stock, and are adding to the difficulties of the rest of the community. The diminution of the number of consumers is the only efficient remedy which, under such circumstances, remains. And this, in countries dependent upon their own supplies, is one of the natural and universal remedies against famine. Where there are no proper means of communication, and the existing stock of food cannot be sufficiently increased by importations from without, the people who cannot get food at home remove themselves to places where food is obtainable. It is easier for them to go to the food than for the food to come to them. Famines are hardly ever universal through a great extent of country, and in India, as in other countries similarly situated, temporary emigration has always been, in times of difficulty, one of the chief modes of relief. When rain falls, and prospects improve, the people will not be long in returning to their homes. There is no danger that the number who remain will not be sufficient for the cultivation of the land meanwhile. The apprehensions that we sometimes hear expressed on this point are, I believe, quite unfounded. Particular estates may be injured by such emigration, but there is no danger that the country at large will suffer. There are perhaps no people in the world more attached to their homes than the people of this country, and if they do not return after their emigration to other quarters, it may safely be assumed that their position has been improved by the change. The question practically is whether people shall remain and die, or emigrate and live. Tens of thousands have, at the present time, answered this question rightly. There is hardly a village in some parts of these Provinces from which many of the people have not emigrated to more fortunate districts.

All measures must be mischievous which tend to check this natural process of relief. Plans which are excellent in times of partial scarcity, when food can be obtained by paying for it, become inapplicable in times of actual famine. Thus, if the Government undertake great public works in a Province where the supply of food is insufficient, and into which the importation of food on a sufficient scale is impossible, the final results may probably be mischievous rather than useful. If they be undertaken on too large a scale, or if the wages offered be much more than sufficient to save people from starvation, the effect will be that the consumption of food instead of being checked will be stimulated; people who would otherwise have emigrated will be kept at home to increase the number of consumers; the supply of food being limited, the expenditure of money will cause prices to rise, and privation will be brought upon a higher class who might otherwise have escaped.

The relief afforded by the Government in the distressed districts ought, therefore, to be no greater than will preserve the people from actual starvation, and every encouragement to emigration should be given. Great public works should be undertaken in those parts of the country where no scarcity exists, and where the supply of food is not likely to run short. These works should be set on foot at the nearest points to the distressed districts at which these conditions can be fulfilled. It is almost unnecessary to add that other conditions have to be fulfilled also. The works, for instance, should of course be useful and remunerative works.

The certainty of obtaining work and food will act as a stimulus to emigration, and will draw away from the distressed districts those who are able to move. In cases of great emergency, the Government should do still more. It ought to take measures for assisting this voluntary emigration, by giving to the emigrants the means of subsistence on the road. It may even become necessary to organize a system for the promotion and regulation of emigration, and for enabling people to return to their homes when the crisis has passed over. The necessity for such measures as this has not actually arrived. But it is possible that it may arrive, and even now it is important that the fact be borne in mind that every reduction in the number of consumers leaves more food available for those who remain.

12. The people employed on the special relief works should be brought together in such numbers as will admit of the most satisfactory direction of their labour to a really useful purpose. To undertake numerous operations widely diffused over the country will almost certainly result in the work done being worthless or nearly so. It is not intended to imply that minor works may not be properly and usefully carried out locally within the means of the district officers, or that such means may not properly be supplemented by the Government. To give local employment to the population on a scale beyond what has been customary in ordinary years may be very desirable and unavoidable, but to stimulate unnecessarily the collection of numbers of starving men by undertaking works of unusual magnitude, where no proper provision can be made for the supply of food, will only tend to exaggerate the evil.

13. The Local Governments should, therefore, at once proceed to consider what works can be carried out within their territories which shall give the best approach possible to a compliance with the above conditions. It may not be very easy to find occupation in suitable localities in districts free from the pressure of famine. But where this is not practicable, places should be selected to which the supply of food is comparatively easy, either by reason of the vicinity of the railway, a navigable river, or a good road. The Local Governments can best determine how this may be done, but the works that suggest themselves to the Governor General in Council as most likely to be suitable will be mentioned.

14. It is understood that the districts north of the Ganges are more favourably circumstanced than the rest of the North-Western Provinces. The earth-works of the projected line of railway which traverses these districts may, therefore probably be selected as suitable for the purpose in view. Ten or fifteen miles of the line might be at once marked out in readiness for actual work, where its position can be fixed at once with certainty.

15. In Oudh there are also portions of the same line of railway, the earth-work of which could certainly be at once put in hand.

The projected canal from the Sardah, though still by no means matured in design, might also in case of pressure be made to afford the means of occupation. The general direction of the principal branches of the canal is fixed by the natural features of the country; and there would be no insurmountable difficulty in arranging for the work to be done so as to make sure that the depth and breadth of excavation now to be carried out should not exceed the dimensions which would eventually be fixed. The levels could be ascertained with sufficient accuracy for such operations in a comparatively short period of time.

16. In the districts between the Ganges and Jumna, the only project for a large work likely to be suitable, which is at all advanced, is that for the Futtehgurh Branch of the Ganges Canal. On the plan suggested for the Oudh Canals, this too could be partly executed.

There are certain projects for still-water navigable lines in connexion with the Ganges Canal, which might also be pushed forward so as to be taken up at once.

The new canal on the right bank of the Jumna below Delhi, though it is probable that the districts through which it passes will suffer greatly if a serious famine occurs, may also be made to give useful occupation. On this canal it would seem to be expedient on the general grounds before stated to commence work at the two extremities near Delhi and Agra, to which places there is railway communication, and to arrange the dimensions of the excavations on the most exact data that can be obtained.

If sufficient progress has been made with the design for the canal from Betwa river in Bundelkhund to admit of work being put in hand upon it, a commencement of the excavation on the main channel might be taken up in the manner before indicated.

17. The projected branch railway from Allygurh to join the Oudh and Rohilkhund line might also probably be taken up, and the earth-work begun, without much difficulty. There seems to be no doubt that Allygurh will be the proper terminus on the East Indian Railway, and that the line should be directed to Moradabad. It could be laid out as far as the Ganges and prepared for the reception of work-people. A prolongation of such a line to the south towards Muttra would also be likely to be eventually useful.

If the Company's Engineers and the Local Government are satisfied as to the proper way of laying out the main line of the Oudh and Rohilkhund Railway, and if the levels have been ascertained, or can be indicated, some commencement of work might also be made on the Rohilkhund side of the Ganges. The same remarks will apply to the line which is to connect the main Rohilkhund line with the foot of the Kumaon hills.

Another possible line of railway, the earth-work of which could perhaps be set in operation, is a branch from Futtehgurh to the East Indian Railway, either direct to Etawah or viâ Mynpoorie to some station higher up the line. Such a line would serve for the traffic from Agra or Allahabad, and would be preferable therefore to one from Cawnpoor. Should the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces desire to commence work on such a line as a relief work, he is at liberty to do so when the necessary preliminary operations are completed to his satisfaction.

18. For the Punjab territories, some of the projects connected with the Western Jumna Canal may no doubt be made to serve for supplying occupation to a distressed population from the west of the Jumna. The Sirhind Canal will also be in a state which will admit of active operations being commenced upon it, and the line on which work was carried out could possibly be extended towards Ferozepoor or Puttiallah as occasion might seem to require.

19. The Governor General in Council is well aware that to undertake, at such short notice, any considerable part of such a series of works will call for very great energy on the part of the Public Works Department, and will be quite out of the question unless every available means of direction and supervision is applied to the task. It would be easier to allow minor works of secondary public utility to be put in hand locally than to organize the labour of the population on more important undertakings such as those which have been named. But it is very important that the utmost real good should be secured from the employment of the population. This employment and the relief of the people incapable of work will cause a heavy drain on the public finances, and it is incumbent on the Government to do all in its power to utilize, in the best way practicable, the labour which will be placed at its command and to obtain the best possible equivalent for the outlay which it will have to incur.

20. The Local Governments and Administrations are, therefore, authorized to take what measures seem to them most suitable for disposing, to the best advantage, the Engineering Establishments under their orders for carrying out such preliminary operations as may, on mature consideration, appear to be best calculated to prepare for giving occupation to a distressed population on a large scale.

The number of officers and subordinates now employed on works of minor importance should be reduced to the utmost, and their places supplied, so far as is essential, by such means as can for the moment be best obtained. In Military stations, officers of the Army may be no doubt found who can carry on less important work for a few months; and where the occasion may arise, the services of Civil officers may without hesitation be also made use of in like manner, or temporary establishments may be engaged.

All works which are not of emergent importance should be postponed to admit of provision being made for the employment of the population in the most useful way possible. This should not, however, be interpreted to signify that any large work now going on, such as the construction of the new barracks, should anywhere be suspended. Such works will continue to be of much service in giving employment, but it will be important to economize the means of supervision as much as possible.

21. For the suggested railway works, the Local Governments and Administrations should not hesitate to solicit the co-operation of the Railway Companies' Officers, which, so far as the circumstances of their more regular occupation will admit, the Governor General in Council feels assured, the Agents of the Companies will readily sanction.

All railway works to be undertaken for the relief of the population should, unless the Railway Company concerned should otherwise desire, be carried out in the first place at the cost of the Government. Work, under the circumstances contemplated, is likely to cost more than in ordinary times, and it will therefore be but just that a Railway Company should be called upon to pay no more than the ordinary price for the work done. It may, however, be hoped that the Railway Engineers will be made available for the supervision of such work to the extent that is practicable.

22. Wherever works are thus taken up under the Public Works Department or Railway Engineers, it will not be difficult to ascertain beforehand the probable quantity of work to be done, and the number of persons who can conveniently be employed in each locality. With this information, the necessary arrangements for distributing the population to be relieved to the different works can be determined, and the system of providing them with food matured.

23. It should be the aim of the Local Governments and Administrations in these operations to comply, as far as circumstances will admit, with all the ordinary rules regarding the disbursement of funds and accounting for them. In the larger works which, under ordinary conditions, call for the sanction of the Government of India, where a general approval has not already been given to the scheme, an outline or approximate statement of the contemplated operation and its cost may be furnished before work is actually begun. As regards the irrigation works, it will be desirable to obtain a preliminary approval of the general plan of operations from the Inspector General of Irrigation Works, who is likely to remain in the North-West Provinces or the vicinity till the end of the year.

24. But the Governor General in Council while thus expressing his desire that these precautions should, as far as possible, be attended to, will not withhold from the Local Governments and Administrations the power of acting at once on their own judgment, in every case in which it shall seem to them essential to order the commencement of any work for the purpose of giving occupation to the people. It is the wish of the Government of India that work shall be everywhere offered to the population as soon as the grant of relief in such a manner is thought by the local authorities to be necessary. It is most expedient that such help should be offered before the population becomes seriously affected by want, and no formalities or risk of eventual loss on the operations put in hand, should be allowed to stand in the way of thus giving relief to any section of the community which seems to be seriously suffering from the high price of food.

25. It is not thought necessary to dwell at length on other matters relating to the manner of dealing with the emergency which may arise. In the North-Western Provinces, the orders given by the late Sir G. Edmonstone, the Lieutenant Governor in 1860-61, will serve as excellent models to be followed. These and other papers of interest will be found in an Appendix to this Resolution. For convenience of reference, a memorandum approved by the Governor General in Council is also annexed, embodying the chief points to which attention has, on other similar occasions, been directed, or which the Government of India now thinks of importance.

26. It only remains for His Excellency in Council to add that the Government will be prepared to contribute in aid of local relief a sum equal to the amount of private subscriptions for that object, in every case in which the Local Government or Administration shall recognize the propriety of such a course.

ORDERED, that this Resolution be recorded both in the Home and Public Works Departments, and forwarded to the Local Governments and Administrations noted in the margin for information and guidance.

Bengal. N. W. Provinces. Punjab.	Oudh. Central Provinces.

Memorandum of measures approved by the Government of India for adoption in time of Famine.

ON the failure of the ordinary rain-fall either in the rubbee or khurreef seasons to such an extent as to render probable the loss of the crop, or such injury as will be followed by a serious scarcity, it will become the duty of the Local Government to cause frequent periodical reports to be made by all District Officers, of the rain-fall, the state of the crops, and the prices of the descriptions of grain in common use.

2. These reports should extend to districts not affected by the drought as well as to those which have suffered.

3. Measures should at the same time be taken for obtaining as accurate returns as possible of the imports of grain by railway, road, or river into the part of the province affected. Such returns should be required only for the grain brought into the province from external markets, not for the internal movement of trade within the districts. Hence the enquiry would commonly be restricted to one or two lines near the frontier of the province.

4. Particular attention should be paid to the accuracy of the price currents, as they have not unfrequently been shown to be untrustworthy.

5. These reports of prices and importations should be published at short intervals while the scarcity lasts, and measures may be taken in the larger towns for making their contents known to the grain merchants.

6. Attention should be given to the manner in which this information is obtained and made public, with the particular object of preventing panics or misapprehension.

7. Strict injunctions should be given to all local officers to abstain from any interference with the ordinary course of trade in the buying and selling of grain. Under no pretext whatever can any one be held to be justified in bringing pressure to bear on the dealers, however serious may be the want of food, or however high may be the prices demanded. These remarks should be held to apply to military cantonments and stations equally with civil stations, towns, and districts.

8. The Local Government alone can be regarded as having authority to direct measures to be taken for the importation of food into any district from a distance, and without special authority, the purchase of grain by public officers otherwise than for distribution to persons receiving relief, is prohibited.

9. So far as is practicable, the purchase of grain for the purpose above referred to should be made from local dealers, and imports by public officers from distant markets, even for the needful supply of works or relief houses in operation, should never take place unless they be specially sanctioned by the Local Government. On this subject reference should further be made to Rules 22, 29, and 30.

10. The importation of grain by the Government should be regarded as a measure only to be adopted in the last resort, and should invariably be reported by telegraph to the Government of India when thought necessary.

11. When food has to be supplied for works undertaken by the Government, or by local Committees, or at relief houses, in places when the ordinary dealers are not able to furnish what is needed, it will commonly be the best plan for the responsible officer to enter into an agreement with some one or more respectable dealers to supply the quantity required. Advances may be made on proper security without interest, on the understanding that the grain will be supplied at a price not higher than that current in the neighbouring markets. But this must be a matter for special arrangement in each case, according to the nature of the accommodation given to the dealer, and the local difficulties he may have to meet in providing for the retail sale. The dealers should, so far as is possible, be allowed to manage the retail sale of the grain by their own agents and in their own way, and only in the case of absolute necessity should the officers of the Government undertake the duty of distributing grain themselves. This will not apply, however, to the case of distributions of cooked food, which it may be more convenient to arrange differently.

12. The grant of relief will, in all cases in which it is possible, whether the claimant is a man, woman, or child, be made contingent on some labor being given in exchange. This will not apply to casual cases of distress which demand immediate help.

13. The persons asking for relief should be classified according to their capacity for work, and those only, fit for such labour as is commonly performed on public works, should be given employment of that description.

14. The class of persons not capable of employment on public works should receive relief in special relief or poor houses organized for the purpose. A description of the arrangements adopted at Moradabad in 1860-61 is given in the appendix.

15. Persons not fit for labour on public works, but capable of working at trades or handicrafts of a simple nature, should be received into the relief houses, and, as far as possible, be given work of the sort which they can best perform. The necessary raw materials should be purchased to admit of this.

16. It will commonly be found most convenient to require the persons in receipt of permanent relief to reside at the relief house, and this rule should be applied with greater strictness to persons physically unable to work at all. For all persons required to remain at a relief house, temporary shelter must be provided.

17. It will also almost always be proper to distribute cooked food at the relief houses and not money. In these cases the grain, &c., may usually be provided without direct interference of the Government, through local dealers, as before explained, the distribution only being undertaken directly.

18. The food offered should, as far as circumstances will admit, be that to which the people are accustomed. The cooking should be conducted with proper regard to caste prejudices.

19. The quantity of food which has been given on former occasions and found sufficient is as follows:—

	Adult man.	Child above 10.	Child below 10.
	ozs.	ozs.	ozs.
Flour	16	12	8
Vegetables...	4	2	2

The above weights are for the food before cooked. Women generally require something less than men.

20. Clothing may be given as well as food, also medical treatment when practicable.

21. Special arrangements should be made for providing employment and food or money, in exchange for work performed, for poor women of a social position which leads them to refuse to go to the relief houses. The account of the Moradabad system is given in the appendix.

22. Persons employed on relief works should usually be paid in cash and not supplied with food directly. It will, however, be essential for the superintending officer to satisfy himself in all cases in which money wages are given, that the arrangements for the supply of food are such as to enable all the labourers to purchase what they require with reasonable convenience, and within a moderate distance of the works. If these conditions cannot be complied with by the agency of private dealers, measures should be taken for opening relief stores or shops, at which food, &c., may be sold, or supplied in fixed quantities, as thought best.

23. Money wages should be only just sufficient to purchase the quantity of food which it is thought proper to allow to the several classes of persons employed, or which would be supplied if food was distributed instead of money.

24. The rates commonly given on former occasions have been—

Adult man	...	... 1½ annas daily.
Woman ...	...	.. 1 " "
Child ...	...	... ½ " "

25. It is specially important to take care that, if higher rates are allowed than the above, a day's work is given in return of the full value of the wages paid. Nothing should be done to attract persons to relief works by wages high in proportion to the work performed, the object being to give a mere subsistence and nothing more.

26. Payments of cash or distributions of food on relief works should be made daily, and not at longer intervals.

27. When labourers are employed on relief works with a prospect of continued occupation being necessary for them, suitable temporary huts should be provided for their shelter. Such shelter can commonly be put up by the people themselves, if allowed to reckon the time occupied as though they had been employed on regular work, and paid accordingly.

28. Due attention should be paid to the ordinary precautions for securing cleanliness in the neighbourhood of the localities where the people are hutted. The special sanitary rules lately circulated are annexed for information, and should receive careful attention.

29. When arrangements cannot be made for the supply of food by the aid of ordinary dealers, the superintending officer of the works must take the supply into his own hands, under such orders as may be issued by the Local Government with respect to the manner of purchasing what is needed. The district civil officers will usually be the most suitable agency for directing such purchases.

30. When food is distributed to workpeople instead of money wages, it will usually be convenient to issue tickets or tokens to those entitled to receive them, to be exchanged at the store-room for the regular allowance of grain, &c. Otherwise great delay and inconvenience is likely to be occasioned by the distribution.

31. It may be proper when food is supplied to give fuel also, if there is difficulty in procuring it; or to give cooked food if prejudices do not stand in the way. Disease is very likely to be caused by eating uncooked grain.

32. To facilitate payments and the check of the number of persons employed, the labourers should be organized in gangs of convenient strength, placed under a head man, who might receive wages without personal labour.

33. Payments of money wages should, as far as possible, be personally supervised by an European officer, or other person of undoubted integrity.

34. It will rarely be possible to adopt the task work system on relief works, or to make the payment directly depend on the quantity of work done. It is an essential condition that enough to support life shall be given, whatever be the physical powers of the labourer, and all that can be expected is to take reasonable precautions to prevent deliberate idleness or refusal to work.

35. Frequent inspections of the work and workpeople should be made by the superintending officers, and reports submitted on their condition. The conduct of the subordinate officials employed should be carefully watched, and all irregularities promptly checked. When food is distributed, its quality should be periodically examined, and the supplies in the dealers' shops should also be inspected to ensure its being of a wholesome quality.

36. The work done should be measured at short intervals so as to guard against abuses. Daily returns of the number of labourers should be kept, and some system of classification followed, to show the classes to which they belong, and the places whence they come.

37. Careful cash accounts of all expenditure must be kept and rendered with complete punctuality, so as to admit of monthly statements being prepared for submission to the Government and the Offices of Account.

38. The complete responsibility of giving effect to all relief measures will rest upon the civil executive officers, under such orders as may be given by the local Government. A Central Relief Committee may conveniently be organized in the sudder station of each district suffering from scarcity, to assist the local civil officers, and the general direction of the relief operations of the whole district may, subject to any rules made by the Local Government, be placed in their hands.

39. Relief houses may be required at some of the principal towns of the distressed districts, and at the sudder station such establishments would be directly superintended by the Central Committee.

40. Minor local relief houses, if established in the interior of the districts, should be placed under the control of the Tehseeldar, or any other public officer, or private person in whom the responsible civil authority, or the Central Committee has confidence. If local Sub-Committees can be formed, it will facilitate the operation. Unless, however, a thoroughly trustworthy person or Committee can be found to superintend such local relief, it will be very doubtful whether it should be attempted, and whether, instead, arrangements should not be made to send the suffering population into the central station.

41. It will be a part of the duty of the persons managing relief houses to see that no able-bodied persons seeking relief are allowed to remain at the relief house for a longer time than is unavoidable, and that they are transferred at once to work upon the most conveniently situated public work in progress in the vicinity. The necessary assistance in money or food may be given to enable such persons to go to the work.

42. It may at times be proper to cause infirm and weakly persons to be carried from their villages to the nearest relief house, and again to assist them to return when the occasion arises.

43. In most cases, the Local District Road Committee will be in a condition to afford employment to able-bodied paupers on works in localities conveniently placed in regard to the relief houses, so as to give the best possible supervision to the whole of the relief operations.

44. The operations of all Relief Committees, whether the destitute poor be employed on public works under the direction of the Committee, or in relief houses, or be incapable of work, should be so conducted as to admit of regular weekly returns being furnished of the number of persons relieved or employed, and the money or grain, &c., expended in an exact manner.

45. Public works under the Committees should be visited and reported on, at least weekly, by one member of the Committee; and the quantity of work done measured and reported to the Committee.

46. The needful arrangements should be made for employing under the Committees, with the sanction of the Commissioner of the division, a suitable establishment for keeping the accounts and returns which are necessary.

47. The returns and accounts of the Local Committees or Relief Houses should be sent to the Central District Committee, and forwarded by them with a general report to the Commissioner of the division monthly.

The Commissioner will forward the returns to the Local Government in original with any observations he thinks fit to make.

48. Relief works under the direction of the Public Works Department will be carried out in general accordance with the rules of the Department so far as circumstances will admit. Regular monthly accounts of all disbursements must be rendered with the usual punctuality, and the quantity of work done must be measured periodically.

49. Any loss or increased expense which arises in the execution of a work being carried out under estimates, from the want of skill or strength of the labouring classes employed on it, must be treated as a special charge due to the relief operations. The amount of this loss must be estimated as closely as possible in each case.

50. All needful special establishments should be entertained to secure the vigilant supervision of the works, and the prompt and regular submission of the accounts of Public Works Officers in charge of relief works. Such establishments may be provisionally authorized by Superintending Engineers, subject to the final orders of the Local Government.

51. All that is possible should be done to distribute the supervising agency of Engineers available under each Local Government in the manner most likely to give efficiency to extraordinary operations undertaken to employ the population. Works of minor importance may be suspended, or the establishments employed on them reduced, and transferred to the relief works. Also temporary establishments may be engaged. In these respects the Local Governments should use a full discretion.

52. All relief works on which public money is expended should, if possible, be of permanent public utility. The application of subscriptions or Government grants to works which will improve the property of individual landholders, without giving any return to the State, is to be avoided.

53. In selecting works for execution, care should be taken that their character is suitable to the available means of supervision. Minor district works of a simple description may properly be carried on under District Committees. Larger operations should not be attempted if it can be avoided, except with the aid of the Public Works Department.

54. The larger works taken up by the Public Works Department should, as far as possible, be in the least distressed districts, or in localities where there are special facilities for obtaining the necessary supplies of food by reason of the proximity of the railway, a navigable river, a good road, or the neighbourhood of markets known to be well supplied.

55. In arranging for the prosecution of such works, it will be expedient to make an approximate estimate of the quantity of work to be done, and thence to reckon the number of persons who can usefully be employed in each locality, or on a given length of the work at one time. On such a calculation, arrangements can be made for directing the population seeking relief to the work where they can be most beneficially employed. These estimates will also admit of the quantity of food likely to be required being approximately determined.

56. One of the great resources of a population suffering from scarcity is temporary emigration to better supplied districts. Nothing should be done to interfere with the natural operation of this means of relieving a suffering district by unduly stimulating the employment of the population within the district, after the available resources have become seriously reduced, and evidence is given that the deficiency is not being made good. On the contrary, it may even be proper to assist such emigration, though in so doing caution will be necessary. Where large public works are in progress on a scale to admit of the employment of large numbers of persons, the suffering population may, with much advantage, receive public help to enable them to reach such works. The facilities of transport given by the railways may, without objection, be taken advantage of in giving practical effect to such a measure.

57. It is important that the means of obtaining work and food should be brought within the reach of the people of a distressed district as early as possible, and that the offer of relief should not be delayed so long as to lead to their strength being destroyed by continued want before they are provided with employment. All danger of creating any objectionable interference with the natural demand for labour on these occasions, is at once rendered impossible by properly limiting the wages offered on relief works. If the rate is fixed so low as merely to give a bare subsistence, it is certain that no one will seek employment on the relief works who can do better for himself in any other occupation. When a real pressure begins, the real sufferers will be led to the works, and as soon as that pressure is taken off, they will leave them.

58. The distinction between employment in time of famine on ordinary works where a full rate of wages is given, and a full quantity of work is exacted in return, and on relief works, where a bare subsistence is given for whatever work the labourer can perform, must be distinctly remembered. The two classes of works may, with perfect propriety, be going on at the same time, not only without interference, but with mutual advantage. The relief house at which support is given without labour; the relief works at which a subsistence is given for a minimum of labour; and the ordinary works where ordinary wages can be earned for the full day's work, provide for the labouring population a gradation between the most complete pauperism and misery, and the healthy state of self-supporting labour.

59. The Local Government in time of severe famine should take special precautions for watching the operations of railways, and the condition of main lines of road, or navigation, &c., by which the import of food on a large scale takes place. Active measures should at once be taken to remove any obstructions which may arise, and the immediate co-operation of the Government of India should be solicited if the evil seems one beyond the immediate powers of the local authorities. The state of the railway stations at which the imports and exports chiefly take place, and of the approaches to them should receive constant attention, and any disposition towards the choking of the traffic should be instantly attended to.

60. The occurrence of a famine is an emergency for which no rules can ever properly provide. The supreme authority cannot do more than indicate the course which past experience points out as likely to be the best, and leave the application of the general principles to the local executive officers. On such occasions, no rules can relieve public officers of their responsibilities, still less can the absence of instructions be held to justify inaction; and any conflict of authority which shall cause obstruction to the execution of needful measures will be most blame-worthy. With the greatly improved means of communication of the present time, there can now hardly ever be sufficient reason for subordinates not instantly seeking instructions when in doubt, or instantly reporting measures adopted on their own responsibility, for which there may not be apparent authority, or regarding the propriety of which there may be doubt.

61. If it be thought necessary from the severity of scarcity, the Local Government may appoint a Special Commissioner to superintend and control the relief operations. The Commissioner would advise Local Committees, and see that the experience of one place was utilized generally. A general Committee may conveniently be associated with the Special Commissioner, or in some cases may perform the duty of general supervision instead of a Special Commissioner.

62. A small Special Office of Account may also be organized, if thought desirable, under the Special Commissioner or general Committee, or otherwise, to control and audit the expenditure of the District Relief Committees.

63. The grants-in-aid given by the Government to Local Committees would be treated as final disbursements in the public accounts; but it would be an implied condition of such grants that proper accounts of the detailed receipts and expenditure of the Committees should be furnished to the Government for audit in such forms as were thought suitable.

64. Disbursements by public officers made directly for relief purposes would be treated in the public accounts like any other disbursements, and charged against the special grant which would be made by the Government of India for the purpose. The Special Relief Account Office, if organized, should receive copies or abstracts of this expenditure to incorporate in a general account of the whole outlay.

65. The general remission of the land revenue on a large scale will seldom be necessary, although it may be proper to grant a temporary suspension of the demand. The complete failure of crops is most commonly confined to limited areas, and even in the worst seasons, there will be some estates in which the loss is small, and more in which the deficiency of produce is compensated by the rise in prices. In 1860-61 the loss in the North-Western Provinces hardly exceeded 6 or 7 lakhs out of about 148 lakhs of rupees. At the same time the Government should be prepared to allow remission of revenue in every case in which it may be shown to be really proper.

66. When remissions of revenue are made, they should be contingent on a suitable remission of rent being proved to have been made by the landlord. In some cases, it may be expedient when the destruction of crops has become an ascertained fact, and under such limitations as may be named by the Local Government, to invite the landlords to remit or suspend the collection of rents, on the assurance that a corresponding remission or suspension of the land revenue will then be allowed to them.

67. It must be borne in mind that the greatest and earliest pressure of a famine falls on the poor of the non-agricultural classes. No doubt, the agricultural population may, in very extreme cases, eventually suffer almost as much, but in the majority of cases, they will have some stock of grain remaining when the scarcity begins, and they will be the first to derive the advantage of whatever supply may be obtained from such crops as come to maturity.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

SURVEY OPERATIONS CARRIED OUT IN THE PUNJAB AND OUDH DURING 1867-68 IN CONNECTION WITH NEW IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

From Major H. W. GULLIVER, R.E., Officiating Under Secretary to Government Punjab, in the Public Works Department, Irrigation Branch, to the Secretary to Government of India, Public Works Department,—No. 9591, dated 31st August 1868.

With reference to your No. 761, dated 19th May 1868, I am directed to forward the following reports on the survey operations that have been carried out during the past season in the Irrigation Department:—

Report by the Superintending Engineer, Eastern Circle, on the operations connected with the Western Jumna Canal.

By the Superintending Engineer, Western Circle, on the operations connected with the Inundation Canals from the right bank of the Sutlej, in the Lahore and Montgomery Districts, and from the right bank of the Indus, in the Dera Ghazee Khan District.

By the Superintendent, Sirhind Canal (Sutlej Canal), of the operations connected with the design for the canal from the left bank of the Sutlej at Roopur for the irrigation of the country between that river and the Guggur and Sursootti rivers.

2. The work done on the Western Jumna Canal comprised several projects for making drainage channels to relieve the country from the floods to which it is at present subject, and the collection of information with regard to a proposed alteration of the line of the upper portion of the canal where it at present runs through low ground. Information was also collected with a view of deciding the quantity of water available in the monsoon for increasing the supply for the irrigation of the districts affected by this canal. One of the drainage channels, the Kandrah, was nearly completed. The Jooah drainage and Rer escape were only just commenced during the last season. The two years in which actual measurements have been made of the quantity of water available from the Jumna in the monsoon have been so exceptional, one having shown a very small, and the other an unprecedentedly high, discharge, that it is difficult to form any conclusion on the subject; a separate report is under preparation.

3. The establishment available for work here was very small. No Executive Engineer was available until April to take charge of the special works; the one appointed left for England in the end of that month. There were no Assistants for the ordinary work of the canal. Hence the quantity of work done was but small; still enough data have, I hope, been collected to allow of the general scheme for the irrigation of this portion of the country being sketched out, and the preparations of the designs being pushed on vigorously during the ensuing working season.

4. For the surveys on the Inundation Canals, the Officers were appointed so late in the year that little beyond a commencement of the work was made.

5. The operations on the right bank of the Sutlej were commenced for the purpose of deciding on improvements to be made to the Inundation Canals, by which this portion of the country is intersected, and the information collected will now be useful in fixing the position of the head for the new canal lately proposed by Colonel Strachey for the irrigation of the lower part of the Baree Doab. Some little more remains to be done to fix the exact position of this head; but this information, combined with that already existing in a report by Lieutenant Colonel Anderson, of the Madras Engineers, and in the offices of the Inundation and Baree Doab Canals, will be sufficient to allow of the design for this canal being rapidly pushed on when Officers are available. This project has already been reported on separately.

6. But very little was done with respect to the canals from the right bank of the Indus. Owing to the lateness of the season at which the Officers joined, only one was sent there. The object of the operations carried on was to ascertain the general levels of the country for the purpose of deciding on improvements to present, and designs for new, Inundation Canals. Another season's work will be required before anything can be decided.

7. With respect to the Sirhind Canal, for the irrigation of the country between the Sutlej, the Guggur, and Sursootti rivers, the position of the head of the canal at Roopur has been decided on. The channel has been lined out as far as the point where the Puttiala Branch will leave the main line. The survey of the trial line for the Puttiala feeder has been carried on for a length of 80 miles, and designs and estimates are being prepared. Many cross sections were also taken for the purpose of desiding the lines to be taken by the other branches.

From the Superintending Engineer, Eastern Circle, Irrigation Works, to the Under Secretary to Government Punjab, in the Public Works Department, Irrigation Branch,—No. 1163, dated 24th June 1868.

With reference to your No. 3471, dated the 26th ultimo, I have the honor to inform you that the Assistant Engineeers in this circle have been employed in the following manner during the past cold weather :—

1*st*.—Mr. Milne, Assistant Engineer in the old Rohtuck Division, was employed from the 6th October to the 9th November 1867 in levelling and surveying for a new line of canal from Indree to the heads of the Delhi and Hansie Canals, and in levelling from swamps in the neighbourhood of Kurnaul, to see if they could be drained without crossing the canal. The first portion of this work is for the present useless, as it is as yet undecided what is to be done between Indree and Rer; and of the second portion, it was found that the swamps about Kurnaul could be drained into the Nya Nuddee, which runs on the right of the main and Rohtuck Canals. From the 1st December 1867 to the 8th April 1868, this Officer was employed in tracing out and levelling down three drainages,—the first from the Dhurngurh bridge, on the Hansie Canal, to the Nya Nuddee, a little above the village of Uhur, on the Rohtuck Canal; the second from the Jatoul bridge, on the Delhi Canal, to the Nya Nuddee, a little above the village of Gohana, on the Rohtuck Canal; and the third from the Didwaree bridge, on the Delhi Canal, to the Nya Nuddee, a little below the village of Gohana, on the Rohtuck Canal. These three drainages are levelled, and Mr. Hammer is now employed in plotting them, and the estimates will be put in hand as soon as the plots are completed. Mr. Milne was also employed in levelling down a proposed line of new supply channel for the Hansie Canal, as suggested by Colonel Strachey. The estimate for this could be prepared as soon as it is finally decided on the best way of arranging for the irrigation below Indree. He also levelled to see the feasibility of irrigating from the present main canal with the reduced supply there would be in it if the supply for the Hansie Branch were taken from Indree, as suggested by Colonel Strachey, and the result was successful as far as the left bank of the canal; but it was found that for the irrigation on the right bank of the present canal, it would be better to take a rajbuha from the new Hansie Canal.

2nd.—Mr. Cotton, Assistant Engineer in the Delhi Division, was employed from the 25th October 1867 to the 18th May on levelling, lining out, and superintending the work on the Kandra, Bhutgong, and Hussungurh drainage lines, and for a short time he was employed in levelling a portion of the Jooah right drainage. The first three of these drainages are nearly completed, and Mr. Cotton has now charge of a sub-division of the canal.

3rd.—Mr. Ivens joined the Delhi Division on the 12th November, and as he was quite new to the country, Mr. Garbett, the then Executive, employed him in preparing the estimates for the Jooah right drainage; the estimate has been sanctioned, and the Assistant is now employed in superintending the excavation of this channel. He was employed also in collecting data for the improvement of the Nujufgurh jheel escape channel; this work has been stopped, as Mr. Garbett went home in April, and to Captain Swinton, the new Executive Engineer, the whole of the Delhi Division was new. In addition to these works, Mr. Ivens was sent into the Delhi and Goorgaon sub-division to measure up work and to level sundry channels: he was also employed by Mr. Garbett to assist him in taking the discharges of the Jumna, Hindun, and canal escapes in December 1867 and January 1868. He has also been employed in preparing the estimate for the Jooah left drainage.

4th.—Mr. Chapman joined on the 24th December 1867, and has been employed until the 6th of April in levelling down the proposed new lines of rajbuha in the Delhi Division. His work will be of no use until some decision is come to as to the best way of irrigating this circle; and as soon as the depth of water which will be in the canal is known, his work will be of use. At present he is employed in plotting his levels.

5th.—The work of the two first Assistant Engineers is good, and is, I believe, correct. Mr. Garbett used to complain of the incorrectness of Mr. Chapman's work, though Captain Swinton reports that his levels are now tolerably correct, though he is a slow worker. Mr. Milne's work is correct as far as can be judged from the bench-marks from which he commenced and on which he closed.

Report on the Survey Operations in connection with the Inundation Canals, Punjab.

Three Officers, Lieutenants Beames, Stillwell, and Nicols, were attached to the Upper Sutlej Division Inundation Canals, and commenced taking cross sections of the low land lying between the Sutlej and the old channel of the Beas. In all, 14 cross sections, at intervals averaging 5 miles, were taken from a village called Nuggur, about 10 miles below Hurreekee, on the Sutlej, to near the town of Hoojra, on the old Beas. The cross sections averaged 15¾ miles each, and with the lines run to connect them to one another, upwards of 300 miles of levelling was done.

A fourth Officer, Mr. Penn, was detached to run a line of levels, and make a survey of the river Sutlej, from the high bank on one side to the high bank on the other. The survey was made from the village of Nuggur to a couple of miles below Mamookee, a total length of 38 miles, the average width being 4 miles, or a total area of 152 miles was averaged, and 37 miles levelled.

A fifth Officer, Lieutenant Downes, R.A., was sent down to Dera Ghazee Khan, and was instructed to run sections from the Indus to the foot of the hills. Four cross sections were completed, which, with the connecting lines, made a total length of levelling of 94 miles.

It was originally intended to employ three Officers on the Sutlej, and three in the Derajat; but the lateness of the season, when some of the Officers joined, prevented this being carried out, and they were set to work at the nearest point at which they could be usefully employed.

The levelling was good, the greatest error having been 0·57 feet in a circle of 46 miles.

The work was not started anywhere till the middle of February, and the season was a very unfavorable one on account of the constant dust-storms that prevailed. Another very great hindrance to the work was the want of trained khullassies. A coolie, picked up in a Punjab village, takes a long time in being trained into an ordinarily intelligent khullassie. The khullassies, lately dismissed from the Baree Doab Canal, were made use of as far as they could be; but few of them would take the temporary employment, and either got service elsewhere, or returned to their homes. The Officers complained bitterly that their work was at least doubled, either from errors in chaining, in holding the staff, in flagging out lines, or some of the other trifles that render a line of levels useless; the whole of these errors being due to the want of training in the khullassies. At the close of the season all the khullassies were dismissed, and a new set will have to be entertained at the commencement of next season, and trained again.

The Officers are at present employed plotting their work; when this has been done and connected on one sheet, some idea can be formed of the country through which they have been working.

Report by Major H. W. GULLIVER, R.E., Officiating Chief Engineer, Irrigation Works, Punjab, on Sutlej Canal Division, for the year 1867-68.

This division was formed on 1st November 1867, and the Officer in charge, Captain Home, was employed during the month of November in preparing the papers, consisting of a revised estimate, and distribution of water, which accompanied Colonel Crofton's report, which was submitted in February 1868, and has since been printed.

Early in December 1867, Captain Home proceeded to Loodiana, when the following Officers, who were placed under his orders, were distributed as follows:—

Mr. Elwes, Executive Engineer, 4th grade, was sent to Roopur, with instructions to make detailed surveys of the country near the head of the canal, both to fix the line of the canal itself, and also those of the diversion cuts for the nullahs which cross the canal in the first five miles of its length. He was also to make surveys and sections of the river Sutlej itself near Roopur, and to complete the levels of the river from Surace Ghât to Roopur, and to obtain information on the subject of materials available near the canal, and to secure to Government the rights of working the quarries, &c., when found. Mr. Elwes performed the work entrusted to him most satisfactorily, and in addition to it, with some assistance from Lieutenant Taylor and Mr. Stewart, when their services became available, he lined out and levelled the centre line of the canal from the heads to the Grand Trunk Road at Bouraha-ke-serai, a distance of 37$\frac{3}{5}$ miles, returning from camp on the 13th May. Lieutenants Taylor and Hanna, and Mr. Stewart, Assistant Engineers, were sent out to commence the cross sections of the country between the Sutlej river and the Kotlah drainage westward from the Grand Trunk Road, and as far as the boundary of the Bhawulpoor territory. Most of this country is in British territory, and had not been touched by Colonel Crofton in his surveys of 1862-63. The cross sections taken were 10 miles apart, and were connected with Colonel Crofton's bench-marks on the Kotlah drainage whenever they should be found. Advantage was taken of the G. T. S. bench-marks on the Loodiana and Ferozepoor Road. And about a month's work was given to each Officer to start with.

The first levels taken were from the Ferozepoor Road to the river, the ends of the sections being connected by levels along the water's edge. The cross sections were then continued in the same bearings to meet Colonel Crofton's bench-marks on the Kotlah drainage, each circle being completed so as to return to a G. T. S. bench-mark, except towards the lower part of the Doab, where the cross sections became very long, and it was thought advisable to divide them into two circles, the connections of the intermediate circle being made on the edge of the high land above Dunda Nulla, which runs past Moodkee. Lieutenant Holloway, who arrived in January, was despatched on the same work as soon as instruments were procured, which was not till the end of the month. These Officers completed the cross sections of this tract with the exception of the two last sections on the borders of Bhawulpoor. One cross section which was required to complete the preliminary survey of the country between the Kotlah Nullah and Guggur river was also completed by this party.

Native Surveyors were attached to them, who traversed up and filled in the courses of the nullahs between the cross sections. Lieutenant Taylor and Mr. Stewart, when they returned from this work, were sent to help Mr. Elwes; the former levelled 25 miles of the centre line from the Grand Trunk Road upwards; and the latter levelled and surveyed some lines for diversion cuts, and above six miles of the canal through very difficult country. Captain Jones, R.E., who joined on 1st January, was also detained for want of instruments. When they arrived, he was entrusted with the survey of a trial line for the Puttiala feeder. Starting from the Grand Trunk Road at Douraha-ke-sarai, his instructions were to fix a line for the feeder which would cross the Kotlah drainage on the level, and give sufficient headway to pass the Sirhind and Puttiala Nullahs, under the canal, taking care at the same time to run as little as possible into embankment, and to avoid heavy digging. Colonel Crofton's surveys gave an approximate line, but very little was known of the course and magnitude of the minor drainages, which appear to have altered very much since the construction of the Grand Trunk Road. This work therefore entailed the collection of much information from the villagers, and careful surveys of the country near the line. Captain Jones was supplied with a moonshee who could speak English, and collected much useful information which is embodied in his surveys. After crossing the Guggur river and closing on one of Colonel Crofton's bench-marks, Captain Jones finally levelled up to Umballa, closing on the G. T. S. bench-mark there with a scarcely appreciable error. He then left with Mr. Cheyne, Executive Engineer, 3rd grade, who joined the division towards the end of April, to make experiments on velocities and discharges in the Baree Doab. The work done during the season may thus be briefly summed up:—

988·5 miles of cross sections levelled.
80 miles of Puttiala feeder and adjoining country levelled and surveyed.
38 miles of maine line laid out and levelled.
14½ miles of drainage and diversion cuts laid out and levelled.
73 miles of levels in connection with the above.
51 square miles of country surveyed and levelled.

Several valuale quarries discovered near the head of the canal, and the rights of quarrying kunkur and stone secured in 10 villages.

The expenditure, with the exception of about Rs. 1,000 spent on securing quarrying rights, and a similar sum for the purchase of tools and instruments, consists entirely of pay of establishment, survey, and office contingencies.

The total length levelled over was 1,193 miles.

From the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner in Oudh, Public Works Department, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Public Works Department,—No. 1247, dated 31st August 1868.

In compliance with orders conveyed in Government India letter No. 781., dated 19th May last, I have the honor, by direction of the Chief Commissioner, to forward copy of a report by Captain Forbes, R.E., describing the survey operations carried out by him during 1867-68 in connection with irrigation projects in this province.

Preliminary Report by Captain J. G. Forbes, R.E., Superintendent of Irrigation Works in Oudh.

With the view of preparing a project for a canal for the irrigation of Oudh (and a portion of the Bareilly and Shahjehanpoor Districts), the following establishment was appointed to the province:—

Captain Forbes, Superintendent.
Mr. Henslowe, Assistant Engineer.
Mr. Froude, Assistant Engineer.
Drummer Groves, Overseer.

2. Commencing so late as the survey did this year, field-work not being begun until February, I was obliged to confine my attention solely to gathering sufficient data to enable Government to judge of the feasibility of the project, and to collecting such information as would enable me to send in an approximate estimate of the probable cost of canals, leaving the collection of details and minutiæ for subsequent works in the ensuing cold season.

3. The surveys, &c., were accordingly apportioned out as follows:—

For myself I reserved the survey and levelling of the upper portion of the river Sardah and the tract of country in the Terai, where the main engineering difficulties would be; the choice of site for canal head, &c., the measurement of the rivers, and the examination of the hills for stone, lime, and other materials, besides a general reconnoissance of the whole province, and part of the North-Western Provinces from Burm Deo to Fyzabad.

To Mr. Henslowe was entrusted the levelling of two cross sections, and the longitudinal lines for two possible branches of a canal—

1*st*.—Down the Doab, between the rivers Ganges and Sye joining the former stream at Cawnpoor.

2*nd*.—Down the Doab between the rivers Sye and Goomtee falling into the latter at Lucknow.

Mr. Froude levelled down the main line from a point about 30 miles below Burm Deo to Fyzabad, where the proposed canal would join the Gogra.

Overseer Groves was employed in levelling cross sections in the Kheree, Seetapoor, and Shahjehanpoor Districts.

4. The dates on which field-work was commenced by each Officer was as follows:—

Captain Forbes, 13th February 1868.
Mr. Henslowe, 8th " "
Mr. Froude, 27th " "

By the latter end of April, the whole of the work specified in the preceding paragraph was completed.

Six hundred and thirty-nine miles of levelling, besides a rough prismatic survey of upwards of 1,200 square miles of country, was finished, the chief portion being levelled by Messrs. Henslowe and Froude, who respectively did 207 and 231 miles.

The reduced levels of 210 bench-marks were fixed, connections were made with the levels of the Rohilkund contour survey, the Ganges Canal, the Great Trigonometrical Survey, and with a series taken by Lieutenant (now Lieutenant Colonel) Anderson, of the Madras Engineers, in 1856-57.

The spring surface level of water in all the wells met with en route was measured, and careful notes were made regarding the irrigational requirement of the districts passed, the proximity of materials and labor, besides a large amount of miscellaneous information, which will come of use when drawing up the project.

5. The main facts elicited by the surveys are:—

1st.—The entire practicability of constructing a first class canal for irrigation and navigation from the river Sardah through the tract referred to in paragraph 1.

2nd.—That at a short distance below the debouchure of the river from the hills, there are two sites, either of which is well adapted for the construction of the head works of a canal.

3rd.—That the supply in the Sardah is sufficient for the irrigation, &c., of the country as far as Fyzabad.

4th.—That if required, the canal can most probably be extended to the Azimghur and Jounpoor Districts by having a supplementary head near the junction of the Sardah and Koreallee.

6. The detailed report and estimate is now in course of preparation, and will be submitted shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Simla on Thursday, the 24th September 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.
The Hon'ble G. N. Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. S. Maine.
The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C.B.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.

BURMESE ÁBKÁRÍ RULES.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE, in moving for leave to introduce a Bill to give validity to certain Abkárí rules in British Burma, said that the present Bill was only a temporary and provisional measure, but that its necessity illustrated the difficulties in which the Government was sometimes placed by the operation of the Indian Councils Act. Before that Act was passed, legislation on such matters as Abkárí was, in the case of the Non-Regulation Provinces, practically in the hands of the local executive. Section 25 of that Statute had the effect of giving the force of law to such rules made before the 1st August 1861. The Commissioner of Pegu, Sir Arthur (then Colonel) Phayre, framed Abkárí rules for that province. He sent them up the Government of India, and they received the requisite sanction. The Indian Councils Act would have made these rules law, but unfortunately, instead of being prescribed as permanent regulations, they were re-published annually. Subsequently, the three Provinces of British Burma were combined in a Chief Commissionership, and the Abkárí rules for the Tenasserim and Arakan Provinces were fused with the made for Pegu, and of course partook of the illegality of the latter. The Recorder of Rangoon had lately convicted an offender against the Abkárí rules in British Burma, but the High Court at Calcutta had quashed the conviction, on the ground that no Act of the Indian Legislature could be referred to as giving validity to the rules in question. Legislation of some sort was, therefore, urgently required, and the Financial Department was in correspondence with the Chief Commissioner of British Burma as to the introduction into that province of the Bengal Abkárí Act. If that Act were introduced, it would of course supersede the present rules to which he proposed to give a temporary validity. If it were not introduced, it would ultimately be necessary to frame a special Abkárí Act for British Burma.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE then asked the President to suspend the Rules for the Conduct of Business, observing that the measure was urgent, as one of its objects was to indemnify officers who had honestly acted in enforcing the present invalid rules.

The President declared the Rules suspended.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE then introduced the Bill, and read it to the Council. He said that the only explanation which it appeared to require was the date, "thirty-first day of March 1868," from which the present rules were to be deemed to have had the force of law. That was the day immediately before the day on which the present rules purported to come into force, and, under Clause 2 of Section 3 of the General Clauses Act No. I of 1868, the former day would be excluded from the period of time mentioned in the Bill. The proposed Act would expire on the publication of a notification of the Governor General of India in Council, and the necessity of passing a repealing Act would thus be avoided when it became desirable to dispense with the present measure. He might mention in conclusion that he had not thought it desirable to adopt the usual practice of placing the rules in a schedule; the language in which they were framed, though very proper in rules for the guidance of Excise Officers, was too vague and popular to permit of their appearing on the Indian Statute Book.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE then moved that the Bill be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned to the 1st October 1868.

SIMLA,
The 24th September 1868.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 24th September 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information :—

ACT No. XXIII OF 1868.

An Act to give validity to certain Abkári Rules in British Burma.

Preamble.

WHEREAS Rules for the sale in British Burma of wine, beer, spirituous and fermented liquors and intoxicating drugs, have, from time to time, been made and published under the authority of the Chief Commissioner of British Burma, and it is expedient to give such Rules, as last published under the authority aforesaid, the force of law, and to indemnify all officers, farmers and other persons who have acted under them, or under any such Rules previously published or enforced under the same authority ; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Validation of Abkári Rules published in British Burma Gazette of 29th February 1868.

1. The Rules for the sale of wine, beer, spirituous and fermented liquors, and intoxicating drugs in British Burma, published in the number of the British Burma Gazette dated the twenty-ninth day of February 1868, shall, from the thirty-first day of March 1868 down to the passing of this Act, be deemed to have had the force of law, and shall continue in force until the Governor General of India in Council by notification in the Gazette of India shall otherwise order.

Validation of previous Rules.

2. All other such rules from time to time published or enforced by or by order of the Chief Commissioner of British Burma on or before the said thirty-first day of March 1868, shall be deemed to have had the force of law.

Indemnification of officers and farmers.

3. All officers, farmers and other persons are hereby indemnified for anything done before the passing of this Act, which might lawfully have been done if this Act had been in force; and no suit or other proceeding shall be maintained against any such officer, farmer or other person in respect of anything so done.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 1st October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information :—

ACT No. XXIV OF 1868.

An Act to prohibit the practice of inoculation in Kumaon and Garhwál.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to prohibit the practice of inoculation with the small-pox in the Districts of Kumaon and Garhwál, it is hereby enacted as follows :—

Penalty for inoculating.

1. Whoever produces or attempts to produce in any person by inoculation with variolous matter, or by wilful exposure to variolous matter, or to any thing impregnated therewith, or who wilfully by any other means produces the disease of small-pox in any person, shall be liable, on conviction before a Magistrate, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, or to both.

Penalty on inoculated person entering place to which Act extends.

2. If any person having been inoculated with the small-pox in a place to which this Act does not extend, shall afterwards enter any place to which this Act extends, before the date of forty days from the date of such inoculation, or without a certificate from a qualified Medical Officer that such person is no longer likely to cause contagion, such person shall be liable, on conviction before a Magistrate, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, or to both.

Reward to informer.

3. Whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine under this Act, the convicting Magistrate may award any portion not exceeding one-half of such fine to the person on whose information the offender has been convicted.

Extent of Act.

4. This Act extends only to the Districts of Kumaon and Garhwál.

The Documentary Evidence Act, 1868.

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Short Title.
2. Mode of proving certain Documents.
3. Act to be in force in Colonies.
4. Punishment of Forgery.
5. Definition of Terms.
6. Act to be cumulative.
Schedule.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Documentary Evidence in certain Cases.

(25*th June* 1868.)

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Law relating to Evidence: Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, as follows:

1. This Act may be cited for all Purposes as "The Documentary Evidence Act, 1868."

2. Primâ facie Evidence of any Proclamation, Order, or Regulation issued before or after the passing of this Act by Her Majesty, or by the Privy Council, also of any Proclamation, Order, or Regulation issued before or after the passing of this Act by or under the Authority of any such Department of the Government or Officer as is mentioned in the First Column of the Schedule hereto, may be given in all Courts of Justice, and in all legal Proceedings whatsoever, in all or any of the Modes hereinafter mentioned; that is to say:

(1.) By the Production of a Copy of the Gazette purporting to contain such Proclamation, Order, or Regulation.

(2.) By the Production of a Copy of such Proclamation, Order, or Regulation purporting to be printed by the Government Printer, or, where the Question arises in a Court in any British Colony or Possession, of a Copy purporting to be printed under the Authority of the Legislature of such British Colony or Possession.

(3.) By the Production, in the Case of any Proclamation, Order, or Regulation issued by Her Majesty or by the Privy Council, of a Copy or Extract purporting to be certified to be true by the Clerk of the Privy Council or by any One of the Lords or Others of the Privy Council, and, in the Case of any Proclamation, Order, or Regulation issued by or under the Authority of any of the said Departments or Officers, by the Production of a Copy or Extract purporting to be certified to be true by the Person or Persons specified in the Second Column of the said Schedule in connexion with such Department or Officer.

Any Copy or Extract made in pursuance of this Act may be in Print or in Writing, or partly in Print and partly in Writing.

No Proof shall be required of the Handwriting or official Position of any Person certifying, in pursuance of this Act, to the Truth of any Copy of or Extract from any Proclamation, Order, or Regulation.

3. Subject to any Law that may be from Time to Time made by the Legislature of any British Colony or Possession, this Act shall be in force in every such Colony and Possession.

4. If any Person commits any of the Offences following, that is to say,—

(1). Prints any Copy of any Proclamation, Order, or Regulation which falsely purports to have been printed by the Government Printer, or to be printed under the Authority of the Legislature of any British Colony or Possession, or tenders in Evidence any Copy of any Proclamation, Order, or Regulation which falsely purports to have been printed as aforesaid, knowing that the same was not so printed; or,

(2). Forges or tenders in Evidence, knowing the same to have been forged, any Certificate by this Act authorized to be annexed to a Copy of or Extract from any Proclamation, Order, or Regulation;

he shall be guilty of Felony, and shall on Conviction be liable to be sentenced to Penal Servitude for such Term as is prescribed by the Penal Servitude Act, 1864, as the least Term to which an Offender can be sentenced to Penal Servitude, or to be imprisoned for any Term not exceeding Two Years, with or without Hard Labour.

5. The following Words shall in this Act have the Meaning hereinafter assigned to them, unless there is something in the Context repugnant to such Construction; (that is to say,)

"British Colony and Possession" shall for the Purposes of this Act include the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, and such Territories as may for the Time being be vested in Her Majesty by virtue of any Act of Parliament for the Government of India and all other Her Majesty's Dominions.

"Legislature" shall signify any Authority other than the Imperial Parliament or Her Majesty in Council competent to make Laws for any Colony or Possession.

"Privy Council" shall include Her Majesty in Council and the Lords and others of Her Majesty's Privy Council, or any of them, and any Committee of the Privy Council that is not specially named in the Schedule hereto.

"Government Printer" shall mean and include the Printer to Her Majesty and any Printer purporting to be the Printer authorized to print the Statutes, Ordinances, Acts of State, or other Public Acts of the Legislature of any British Colony or Possession, or otherwise to be the Government Printer of such Colony or Possession.

Gazette" shall include the London Gazette, the Edinburgh Gazette, and the Dublin Gazette, or any of such Gazettes.

6. The Provisions of this Act shall be deemed to be in addition to, and not in derogation of, any Powers of proving Documents given by any existing Statute or existing at Common Law.

SCHEDULE.

ABSTRACT OF THE ENACTMENTS.

1. Prize Money to be paid and placed to the Credit of the Revenues of India, subject to be refunded without Interest.
2. Times within which Payments are to be made.
3. Power to the Secretary of State in Council to recover Monies as herein directed. Persons required to pay over Prize Money to be liable to account.
4. Nothing in the Act contained to prevent trying Rights to Prize Money.
5. Nothing to prejudice any Rights or Powers the Secretary of State in Council already has to the Prize Money.

An Act for the Appropriation of certain unclaimed Shares of Prize Money acquired by Soldiers and Seamen in India.

BE it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, as follows; (that is to say,)

1. All and every Shares and Share of Booty, Prize Money, Head Money, Bounty Money, and Salvage Money, and of Money arisen or which shall hereafter arise from, or which is now or shall hereafter be distributable in respect of, any Capture or other warlike Service whatsoever which has heretofore been or shall hereafter be made or performed, and to which Shares or Share any Officer, Soldier, Sailor, or other Person at any time in or belonging or having belonged to the Forces of the East India Company, to Her Majesty's Indian Staff Corps, or to Her Majesty's Local Indian Forces, European or Native, is now or shall hereafter be entitled, in whatsoever Service the same may have been acquired, and which Shares or Share have come into and are now remaining in the Hands, or shall hereafter come into the Hands, of any Prize Agent or Agents, or any other Person whomsoever shall be paid, according to the Residence of the Party or Parties paying the same, either in London into the Bank of England to the Account of the Secretary of State in Council of India, or in India into such Places and in such Manner as the Government in India shall direct; and all sums of Money when so paid shall be placed to the Credit of the Revenues of India, and shall for all Purposes form Part of such Revenues, and be applicable in all respects as such Revenues are or shall be applicable, subject, nevertheless, to be refunded, without Interest, to any Person or Persons entitled to the same, and establishing his, her, or their Claim or Claims thereto to the Satisfaction of the Secretary of State in Council of India.

2. All Money now remaining in the Hands of any Prize Agent or Agents or any other Person or Persons whomsoever, and which is hereby directed to be paid and be placed to the Credit of the Revenues of India, and which shall be to be paid in England, shall be paid within Two Calendar Months next after the passing of this Act, and all such Money which shall be to be paid in India shall be paid within Six Calendar Months next after the passing of this Act; and all Money which shall hereafter come into the Hands of any Prize Agent or Prize Agents, or any other Person or Persons whomsoever, and which is hereby directed to be paid and be placed to the Credit of the Revenues of India, whether the same shall be to be paid in England or India, shall be paid within Two Calendar Months next after the Receipt thereof by such Prize Agent or Agents or other Person or Persons.

3. The Secretary of State in Council of India shall have and may exercise the same or the like Powers, Rights, and Remedies, so far as the same shall be applicable for Discovery and Recovery of and otherwise in relation to or in respect of the Monies hereby directed to be paid and to be placed to the Credit of the Revenues of India, as the Commissioners or the Treasurer for the Time being of Chelsea Hospital, or the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom or the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral, or any other Persons or Person, or any Corporation entitled to or interested in any Prize Money acquired by or due to any Officers, Soldiers, or Seamen in or belonging to Her Majesty's European Military or Naval Forces, have or can exercise by virtue of any Act or Acts now in force for the Discovery or Recovery of or otherwise in relation to or in respect of such last-mentioned Prize Money, and all Courts of Law and Equity and of Admiralty Jurisdiction in the United Kingdom and in India shall have and may exercise the same or the like Jurisdiction, Powers, and Authorities for compelling every Person to account for and pay over the Monies hereby directed to be paid and be placed to the Credit of the Revenues of India as any Court of Law or Equity or of Admiralty Jurisdiction may now exercise with respect to any Prize Money acquired by or belonging to any such Officers, Soldiers, or Seamen as last aforesaid; and every Person who is required by this Act to pay over any Share or Shares shall be subject to the like Liability to account for the same, and to the like Fines and Penalties for Neglect or Default in not accounting for the same, and otherwise, as Agents or other Persons are by any Act or Acts now in force subject to in respect of any Shares or Balances of Prize Money acquired by or belonging to any such Officers, Soldiers, or Seamen as last aforesaid.

4. Nothing in this Act contained shall prevent any Person or Persons from resorting to any Remedy at Law or in Equity against the Secretary of State in Council of India for the Recovery of Principal without Interest of any Money to which he or they may be entitled, and which shall be paid in Manner hereinbefore directed, and placed to the Credit of the Revenues of India, provided such Person or Persons shall prefer his or their Claim thereto to the Secretary of State in Council of India within Six Years from the respective Times at which the same Money shall be so paid as aforesaid.

5. Nothing herein contained shall take away or affect any Right which the Secretary of State in Council of India now has, or if this Act had not been passed would at any Time have had, to or in respect of any Monies hereby directed to be paid, nor shall diminish, abridge, or prejudice any Rights, Powers, or Remedies which the Secretary of State in Council of India has, or if this Act had not been passed would have had, or could at any Time have enforced, for the Discovery or Recovery of the same Monies, or any of them.

RESOLUTION.—His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council observes that these references originated with a case which occurred at Allahabad, where an Officer wished to part with his house to a Native under circumstances not open to any suspicion, and with a remark from the Home Department, to the effect that some change or relaxation of the rule which prohibits the sale of property to Natives by public servants under any circumstances seemed desirable. At present, under the Notification of the 3rd of December 1858, drawn up in consequence of the orders of the late Court of Directors, sales of property to Natives are strictly prohibited, and Officers are thereby directed to refer all transactions, in regard to which they have any doubts, for the orders of superior authority.

2. His Excellency in Council observes that the weight of authority on the part of the various Administrations and Departments which have lately been consulted on this subject, is decidedly in favor of some modification of the existing rule, or, at least, of more clearly and accurately defining the course to be pursued in such cases. There can be no doubt that the restrictions imposed hitherto on such transactions have been, to a certain extent, beneficial, and that the Government of India, though it can place a full reliance on the fair dealing, honour, and integrity of its civil and military services, has a right to expect not only that all such transactions shall be correct and unimpeachable in themselves, but that they shall not run any risk of misconstruction at the hands of designing, ignorant, or credulous persons.

3. The Government of India is also well aware, as pointed out by some of the high authorities consulted, that many officials who on joining their stations have become the owners of houses either under an absolute necessity, or from laudable motives of convenience and comfort, may, on quitting the district or province to which they have been for some time attached, literally find no purchasers for their property except Natives of wealth or substance. When such transactions openly and avowedly take place, no evil consequences, His Excellency in Council thinks, need ever ensue under proper precautions.

4. The following rules have therefore been drawn up in supersession of the existing rule, and are hereby published for general information. They must be considered applicable to European public servants of all descriptions, Civil, Military, and Uncovenanted.

5. I.—Whenever a public servant wishes to dispose of a house. bungalow, elephant, horse or carriage, or other valuable property to any Native within his jurisdiction, or within the limits of the district in which he is employed on the public service, and from which he is not about to remove, he must report his intention to the Local Government to which he is subordinate, stating the facts and circumstances, and the price offered for the article to be sold. The Local Government will then pass such orders on the reference as may seem fit and proper.

II.—Whenever a public servant is about to quit his station or district permanently, or for a considerable period, and wishes to dispose of his house, bungalow, elephant, carriages, and horses, and the like property of value to Native purchasers, he shall report his intention to the Commissioner or the head local authority to which he may be immediately subordinate, and that authority will use its discretion in allowing the transaction, or in reporting the circumstance to the Local Government for further orders.

III.—Whenever a public servant, on quitting his station or district, wishes to dispose of his furniture, household goods, livestock, &c., he is at full liberty to do so either by circulating lists of such property amongst the community generally, or by having the same put up to public auction, without reference to any authority whatever. All that is necessary is that the transaction should be open and patent to every body on the spot.

IV.—Rule No. 1 is to be considered applicable to purchases equally with sales.

6. The observance of the above rules will, His Excellency in Council thinks, fully meet the inconveniences and exigencies to which gentlemen of acknowledged honour and probity would be put on many occasions, if debarred from such transactions, while at the same time they will be a sufficient safeguard against any abuse, any imputation of unfair or interested dealings, or any possibility of misconception on the part of the non-official community.

ORDER.—Ordered, that a copy of the above Resolution be sent to all Governments, Administrations, and Agencies, for information and guidance.

Ordered further, that a copy of the above be sent to the Departments noted in the margin for information.

A letter from the Deputy Accountant General, North-Western Provinces, No. 3299, dated 12th August 1868, enquiring whether Mr. Handford, Director of Public Instruction in the North-Western Provinces, should, during absence on privilege leave, pay the acting allowance of his substitute.

RESOLUTION.—In supersession of all existing rules, the Governor General in Council is pleased to allow Uncovenanted Officers absent on privilege leave to draw their full pay during such absence, the acting allowances due to their substitutes being paid out of the general revenues.

ORDERED, that the foregoing Resolution be sent to the several Departments, Governments, and Provincial Accountants General, and to the Comptroller General of Accounts, with an intimation to the Accountant General, North-Western Provinces, that this Resolution will govern the case of Mr. Handford submitted by him.

Ordered also, that the above be published in the Gazette of India for general information.

A communication from the Public Works Department on the subject of applications for leave on medical certificate by Uncovenanted Officers, No. 291, dated 2nd September 1868, in reference to the case of Mr. Adamson, Deputy Conservator of Forests in British Burmah.

Read—

Again Rule 6 of the Uncovenanted Service Leave Rules, dated 13th April 1864.

OBSERVATIONS.—The Governor General in Council observes that the above quoted rule does not require that applicants for leave on medical certificate beyond sea, should appear personally before the Principal Inspector General of the Medical Department. The final words of that rule only require that the certificate be submitted, with a statement of the case, for the countersignature of that officer.

It has been assumed in the communication of the Public Works Department from the Calcutta practice, that, although no mention is made in the rules of appearance before a Medical Board at the Presidency, yet that the Principal Inspector General may impose this condition, if he thinks proper, before countersigning the certificate.

The Governor General in Council is of opinion that this assumption is not warranted, and that the objection to the present rule so far as it is founded on that assumption is groundless.

But even the necessity of sending by post the certificate from Rangoon to Madras for countersignature, would be productive of delay, which in cases of severe illness might be fatal.

RESOLUTION.—The Governor General in Council is therefore pleased to rule that, in modification of the provision in the 6th rule above quoted, which requires the countersignature of the Principal Inspector General of the Medical Department to authorise medical certificates in cases of leave beyond sea, leave may be granted on the medical certificate being countersigned by the local Deputy Inspector General of Hospitals, when, from the nature of the illness of the applicant, delay would be hurtful.

ORDERED, that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the Public Works Department, and that it be communicated to the several Local Governments and Administrations, and to the Comptroller General of Accounts, and to the several Accountants and Deputy Accountants General in independent charge: also that it be published in the Gazette of India.

RESOLUTION.—The Governor General in Council is pleased to declare that the Resolution quoted above does not apply to leave granted to Military Officers in Military employ.

ORDERED, that the foregoing Resolution be published in the Gazette of India, and communicated to the Military Department and the Governments of Madras and Bombay.

2. The Committee of Officers ordered by G. O. C. C., dated 22nd October 1863, to be convened to report on the arms, accoutrements, clothing, and other stores of Regiments or Detachments embarking for England, will undertake the duties of the Board of Survey as prescribed in clause 1 of these rules.

3. The return of the quantity, condition, and Indian rates of the necessaries taken home with the troops, will be prepared in triplicate as per form prescribed below. One copy to be retained by the Commanding Officer; one copy to be forwarded by the President through the Commanding Officer to the Under Secretary of State for India, to be despatched to the India Office immediately on the arrival in England of the vessel conveying the troops, and the remaining copy to be sent direct to the Controller of Military Accounts.

4. These rules do not apply to necessaries peculiar to Indian Service, which will not be taken home by troops, but disposed of in this country, and, if possible, by transfers to Regiments in India, as directed in the subjoined copy, clause 72 of Army Circulars of 1868, the instructions contained in which have been already communicated in Military Department's letters as per margin, to the Adjutant General of the Army and the Governments of Madras and Bombay, &c.

Description of necessaries.	Original date of issue.	Present condition with reference to time in use.	Value on the Books of Indian Government.	Period to last.	Present value (to be filled up by Committee in England.)	REMARKS.

WAR OFFICE:
27th March 1868.

With reference to your letter of the 28th ultimo, relative to the arrangements for the inspection of necessaries brought home by troops from India, and to your proposition that such necessaries should, in lieu of being surveyed by a Regimental Board, in future be submitted to the inspection of the Committee charged with the survey of clothing and other stores taken to and brought home from India by Regiments, I am directed by Secretary Sir John Pakington to request that you will submit to the Secretary of State for India in Council the following arrangements which have been framed with the view of meeting the requirements of your letter under reply.

1. That, prior to the embarkation of a Regiment from India for this country, a separate return, in duplicate, of all articles of necessaries in the regimental store, which will be taken from India, shall be prepared by the Board of Survey which at present deals with clothing and other stores at the port of embarkation in India, and that such return shall show the quantity and condition of each article, and the Indian rates for the same.

2. That the return shall be signed by the Officer Commanding the Corps, who shall retain one copy; the other being forwarded by the Board of Survey to the Under Secretary of State for India.

3. That, immediately on the arrival of the Corps at its station in this country, the necessaries in store shall be examined by a Regimental Board, a copy of whose proceedings, showing any issues that may have been made since the examination of the store in India, and explanatory of any discrepancies between the two returns, shall then be forwarded to the Under Secretary of State for War for the guidance of the Inspecting Officer who represents this Department.

4. That the return forwarded by the Indian Board of Survey to the India Office shall be placed in the hands of the Officer representing that Department, and that the two Inspecting Officers shall then examine the actual stock of necessaries brought home by the Corps.

5. That the examination of the Inspecting Officers shall, as regards the condition of the necessaries, be confined to articles which may have been rejected by the Regimental Board; and that in the event of any difference of opinion arising between the Inspecting Officers as to the propriety of any rejections made by that Board, a sample of each rejected article shall be forwarded to the Inspector of Clothing, Royal Army Clothing Depôt, Pimlico, who shall report thereon for the final decision of the Secretary of State for War.

6. That the Inspecting Officers shall examine the actual quantities of the necessaries brought home, and shall report thereon for the information of the Secretary of State for War, giving a summary of the regimental explanations of any deterioration or deficiency which may have been discovered on comparing the actual state of the stock with the report of the Indian Board of Survey.

7. That the report of the Inspecting Officers shall also show in detail the value of any necessaries which may have been disposed of to the troops between the dates of the respective reports of the Indian Board of Survey and of the Survey Committee in this country, and where the regimental authorities propose to credit such value to the public, in order that it may be transferred to the India Office.

8. That the Inspecting Officers furnish a valuation statement, based, as regards rates, on the War Office Necessaries Price Circular in force at the time of their inspection, of the articles of necessaries brought from India which will be retained by the Corps, in order that the value of such articles may be passed to the credit of the India Government.

I am further to state that all articles finally rejected by the Survey Committee will be forwarded to the India Store Department, and that Officers commanding will be called upon to account for the value of all necessaries which may remain chargeable to the Corps under the original Indian survey report, but which may not have been reported by the Inspecting Officers in this country as either—

1. Sold to the men;

2. Returned (rejected) to India Store Department; or,

3. Taken over by the War Office.

I am to add that, pending the adoption of new arrangements, the system at present in force will be acted upon with regard to the valuation of necessaries brought home by troops from India.

I have, &c.,

(Sd.) EDWARD LUGARD.

The Under Secretary of State for India.

ARMY CIRCULAR.

WAR OFFICE;
1st July 1868.

CLAUSE 72.—Necessaries—Regiments leaving India.

1.—With reference to Circular Memorandum No. 372, dated "Horse Guards, 6th May 1866," Officers Commanding are informed that Regiments or Batteries leaving India for Home Stations or the Colonies should transfer to Regiments remaining in that country, or should return to the local authorities such articles of necessaries as are peculiar to service in India.

2.—In accordance with the provisions of the General Order by the Governor General of India, dated 31st December 1864, No. 1080, Commanding Officers of Regiments or Batteries under orders for relief from India may transfer such necessaries as can be conveniently spared to any other Regiment or Battery serving in India which may apply for them.

3.—Regiments or Batteries leaving India will, however, take with them, and account for to the War Office, all such articles of regimental necessaries, detailed in the regulations, as are not special to India, and remain on regimental charge after the transfer alluded to in the foregoing paragraph.

4.—This clause is applicable to India.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Simla on Thursday, the 1st October 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, presiding.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.
The Hon'ble G. N. Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. S. Maine.
The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C.B.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.
The Hon'ble Sir George Couper, Bart., C.B.

The Hon'ble Sir George Couper took the oath of allegiance and the oath that he would faithfully discharge the duties of Additional Member of the Council of the Governor General for making Laws and Regulations.

INOCULATION (KUMAON AND GARHWAL) BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to prohibit the practice of inoculation in Kumaon and Garhwál, and asked the President to suspend the Rules for the Conduct of Business.

The President declared the Rules suspended.

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY then moved that the Report be taken into consideration. He said that the Committee had made no alterations, and had recommended the Bill to be passed. When he introduced the Bill, he had explained that the Government of the North-Western Provinces had come to the conclusion that legislation on the subject was necessary, and in consequence of this conclusion, the present measure had been prepared. For some time past, the practice of inoculation had been prohibited in Kumaon and Garhwál under the belief that such prohibition was lawful under a certain section in the Penal Code. It had, however, been recently ascertained that such a belief was erroneous. He had explained when he introduced the Bill that the case of Garhwál and Kumaon was peculiar. Thanks to the administrative energy and good sense of Dr. F. Pearson, Superintendent General of Vaccination, the people of those Districts were said to be protected against small-pox to an extent hardly surpassed in any country. This fact was the sole but sufficient justification for prohibiting locally the practice of inoculation. Hon'ble Members would observe that the Bill gave no power to the Local Government to extend the Act to other parts of the North-Western Provinces, although, under the corresponding Act of the Bengal Council, the Lieutenant Governor had that power. The reason for the conclusion that no such power should be given in the present instance was, that it would be unjustifiable to prohibit inoculation unless where really complete arrangements for vaccination existed. The best authorities were decidedly of opinion that inoculation, however inferior to vaccination, was preferable to the total omission of any such precaution. Now it was and always would be difficult to establish a system of vaccination throughout a great part of the North-Western Provinces, for, in the plains of India, successful vaccination was possible only during a few months of the cold weather, and much of what was called vaccination was not vaccination at all. It was only in the hills, where the temperature for the greater part of the year remained at a comparatively low degree, that it was possible to carry out vaccination so as to protect the whole community. He had recently received a valuable report by Dr. Edmonstone Charles, Superintendent General of Vaccination in Bengal, on the subject of inoculation in that Province, and the facts given in that report entirely bore out the conclusions which he (Mr. STRACHEY) had now stated.

He believed those conclusions to be in accordance with the opinions of the highest medical authorities in India. As Dr. Charles says in the report which he had cited, what was wanted in the plains of India except under those unusual circumstances in which it might be possible to give complete protection by vaccination, was the regulation of inoculation rather than its prohibition.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble MR. STRACHEY then moved that the Bill be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

COORG COURTS BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. TAYLOR presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define the jurisdiction of the Courts in Coorg.

LOCK-HOSPITALS BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE moved that the Bill to enable the Municipalities to provide for Lock Hospitals be referred to a Select Committee, with instructions to report in a week. He said that in last July, he had introduced the Bill for the purpose of being published in the Gazette, so that the opinion of the public on the measure might be elicited. No remarks, so far as he was aware, had been made hostile either to the principle or the details of the Bill. The Bill in fact was merely an enabling measure, and no objection could, he thought, reasonably be made to its enactment.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The following Select Committee was named :—

On the Bill to enable Municipalities to provide for Lock-Hospitals—the Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell, the Hon'ble Sir George Couper, and the Mover.

The Council then adjourned till the 8th October 1868.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 24th September 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

ACT No. XXIII OF 1868.

An Act to give validity to certain Abkári Rules in British Burma.

Preamble.

WHEREAS Rules for the sale in British Burma of wine, beer, spirituous and fermented liquors and intoxicating drugs, have, from time to time, been made and published under the authority of the Chief Commissioner of British Burma, and it is expedient to give such Rules, as last published under the authority aforesaid, the force of law, and to indemnify all officers, farmers and other persons who have acted under them, or under any such Rules previously published or enforced under the same authority; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Validation of Abkári Rules published in British Burma Gazette of 29th February 1868.

1. The Rules for the sale of wine, beer, spirituous and fermented liquors, and intoxicating drugs in British Burma, published in the number of the British Burma Gazette dated the twenty-ninth day of February 1868, shall, from the thirty-first day of March 1868 down to the passing of this Act, be deemed to have had the force of law, and shall continue in force until the Governor General of India in Council by notification in the Gazette of India shall otherwise order.

Validation of previous Rules.

2. All other such rules from time to time published or enforced by or by order of the Chief Commissioner of British Burma on or before the said thirty-first day of March 1868, shall be deemed to have had the force of law.

Indemnification of officers and farmers.

3. All officers, farmers and other persons are hereby indemnified for anything done before the passing of this Act, which might lawfully have been done if this Act had been in force; and no suit or other proceeding shall be maintained against any such officer, farmer or other person in respect of anything so done.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 1st October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

ACT No. XXIV OF 1868.

An Act to prohibit the practice of inoculation in Kumaon and Garhwál.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to prohibit the practice of inoculation with the small-pox in the Districts of Kumaon and Garhwál, it is hereby enacted as follows:—

Penalty for inoculating.

1. Whoever produces or attempts to produce in any person by inoculation with variolous matter, or by wilful exposure to variolous matter, or to any thing impregnated therewith, or who wilfully by any other means produces the disease of small-pox in any person, shall be liable, on conviction before a Magistrate, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, or to both.

Penalty on inoculated person entering place to which Act extends.

2. If any person having been inoculated with the small-pox in a place to which this Act does not extend, shall afterwards enter any place to which this Act extends, before the date of forty days from the date of such inoculation, or without a certificate from a qualified Medical Officer that such person is no longer likely to cause contagion, such person shall be liable, on conviction before a Magistrate, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, or to both.

Reward to informer.

3. Whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine under this Act, the convicting Magistrate may award any portion not exceeding one-half of such fine to the person on whose information the offender has been convicted.

Extent of Act.

4. This Act extends only to the Districts of Kumaon and Garhwál.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 8th October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

ACT No. XXV OF 1868.

An Act to define the jurisdiction of the Courts in Coorg.

[AS AMENDED BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE.]

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define the jurisdiction of the Civil and Criminal Courts in the Province of Coorg; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called "The Coorg Courts' Act."

Commencement of Act.

Section 25 shall take effect at once and the rest of this Act shall come into operation on the first day of December 1868.

Grades of Courts in Coorg.

2. There shall be six grades of Civil Courts in the province of Coorg, which shall be in addition to any Courts of Small Causes and to any other Courts established under any Act hereafter passed by the Governor General of India in Council (that is to say),—

(1.) The Court of the Súbahdár of the second class:

(2.) The Court of the Súbahdár of the first class:

(3.) The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the second class:

(4.) The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the first class:

(5.) The Court of the Superintendent; and

(6.) The Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

The Criminal Courts in the said Province shall be those referred to in the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Civil Jurisdiction.

Power to declare grades of Súbahdárs and Assistant Superintendents.

3. Subject to any orders that may from time to time be issued by the Governor General of India in Council, the Commissioner of Coorg shall have power to declare to which of the said grades any Súbahdár and any Assistant Superintendent shall belong.

Power to invest Párbatiyagárs and Naib Súbahdárs with jurisdiction up to Rupees fifty.

4. The Commissioner may invest any Párbatiyagár and any Náib Súbahdár with power to try and determine suits for money due whether on bond or other contract or for rent, or for moveable property, or for the value of such property, or for damages, when the debt, damage, or demand does not exceed in amount or value the sum of Rupees fifty, and to prescribe the local limits within which the Párbatiyagár or Naib Súbahdár so invested shall exercise such power.

Jurisdiction of Súbahdár of second class.

5. The Court of the Súbahdár of the second class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees one hundred in value or amount.

Jurisdiction of Súbahdár of first class.

6. The Court of the Súbahdár of the first class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees three hundred in value or amount.

Jurisdiction of Assistant Superintendent of second class.

7. The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the second class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees one thousand in value or amount, and, subject to the provisions and limitations hereinafter prescribed, to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions in suits, and (where an appeal is allowed by the rules of procedure) from the orders of the Courts of the Súbahdárs of the first and second classes respectively, and of Párbatiyagárs or Náib Súbahdárs invested as aforesaid.

Jurisdiction of Assistant Superintendent of first class.

8. The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the first class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees three thousand in value or amount, and, subject to the provisions and limitations hereinafter prescribed, to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions in suits, and (where an appeal is allowed by the rules of procedure for the time being in force in Coorg) from the orders of the Courts of the Súbahdárs of the first and second classes respectively, and of Párbatiyagárs or Náib Súbahdárs invested as aforesaid.

Jurisdiction of Superintendent.

9. The Court of the Superintendent shall have power to try and determine suits of every description and of any amount, and to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions in suits and (where an appeal is allowed by the said rules of procedure) from the orders of the Courts of Súbahdárs and Assistant Superintendents of both classes respectively, and of Párbatiyagárs or Náib Súbahdárs invested as aforesaid.

Jurisdiction of Judicial Commissioner.

10. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner shall have power to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions of the Superintendent in suits, and (where an appeal is allowed by the said rules of procedure) from the orders of the Superintendent, and also special appeals from the decisions passed by the Superintendent or by an Assistant Superintendent of either grade on regular appeal:

Provided that such special appeals shall lie on the ground of the decision being contrary to some law or usage having the force of law, or of a substantial error or defect in law in the procedure or investigation of the case, which may have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits, and on no other grounds:

Provided also that no special appeal shall lie from any decision or order passed on regular appeal after the passing of this Act, in any suit of the nature cognizable in a Court of Small Causes under Act No. XI of 1865, section six, when the debt, damage or demand for which the original suit is instituted does not exceed three hundred rupees; but every such order or decision shall be final.

Time for presenting appeals.

11. The memorandum of appeal prepared in the form and containing the particulars mentioned in the Code of Civil Procedure shall be presented in the Court empowered to hear an appeal within the period hereinafter specified, unless the appellant shows sufficient cause to the satisfaction of such Court for not having presented the memorandum of appeal within such period, that is to say, thirty days if the appeal lie to the Assistant Superintendents or Superintendent, and ninety days if the appeal lie to the Judicial Commissioner.

The said period shall be reckoned from and exclusive of the day on which the decision or order appealed against was passed, and also exclusive of such time as may be requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree or order from which the appeal is made.

Special appeals shall be presented in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner within the period hereinbefore fixed for appeals.

Extraordinary original jurisdiction of Judicial Commissioner.

12. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner shall have power to remove and to try and determine as a Court of extraordinary original jurisdiction, any suit within the jurisdiction of any Court in the said province when he thinks proper to do so, either on the agreement of the parties to that effect, or for purposes of justice, the reasons for so doing being recorded on the proceedings of his Court.

Judicial Commissioner to superintend and to frame rules of practice for subordinate Courts.

13. The Judicial Commissioner shall have superintendence over all Courts in the said province, and shall have power to call for returns and to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of such Courts, and also to prescribe forms for every proceeding in the said Courts for which he thinks necessary that a form be provided, and also for keeping all books, entries and accounts to be kept by the officers, and also settle tables of fees to be allowed to the attorneys, vakeels, and all clerks and officers of such Courts, and from time to time to alter any such rule, form or table.

The rules, forms, and tables so made, framed and settled, shall be used and observed in the said Courts: Provided that such rules, forms and tables be not inconsistent with the provisions of any law in force for the time being, and shall before they are issued have received the sanction of the Commissioner.

Governor General in Council may confer powers of Superintendent or Assistant Superintendent.

14. Whenever the state of the public business requires it, the Governor General of India in Council may invest any person with the powers of a Superintendent or Assistant Superintendent in any part of the province of Coorg.

Court in which suit shall be instituted.

15. Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it: Provided that no suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes which may hereafter be established, shall be heard and determined in any other Court having any jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court of Small Causes.

Appeal to lie from all decisions, except when expressly prohibited.

16. Except when otherwise provided in any law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from the decisions of the Courts of original jurisdiction to the Courts authorized by this Act to hear appeals from the decisions of those Courts.

Distribution of business among subordinate Courts.

17. The Superintendent may direct the business in the Courts subordinate to him whether or not they have their sittings in the same place, to be distributed among such Courts in such way as he thinks fit: Provided that no Court shall try any suit in which the amount or value of the claim shall exceed its proper jurisdiction.

Local limits within which Appellate Courts shall exercise appellate jurisdiction.

18. The Superintendent shall from time to time, with the concurrence and approval of the Commissioner, prescribe to each of the Appellate Courts subordinate to him such local limits within which they shall respectively exercise their appellate jurisdiction.

Transfer of suits from subordinate Court to that of the Superintendent or Assistant.

19. The Superintendent may, on the petition of either party, or in the absence of such petition, withdraw any suit instituted in any Court subordinate to him, and try such suit himself or refer it for trial to any other such subordinate Court, and competent in respect of the value or amount of the suit to try the same.

The Superintendent may also withdraw any appeal instituted in the Court of any Assistant Superintendent subordinate to him, and try the appeal himself or refer it for trial to the Court of any other Assistant Superintendent in his province.

Transfer of suits from one subordinate Court to another.

20. The Judicial Commissioner may order that the cognizance of any suit or appeal instituted in any Court subordinate to his Court, not being a Court of Small Causes, shall be transferred to his own Court or to any other such subordinate Court competent in respect of the value or amount of the subject matter of the suit or appeal to try the same.

Criminal Jurisdiction.

Superintendent to be Chief Officer charged with executive administration of District in criminal matter.

21. For purposes of criminal jurisdiction, the Superintendent of Coorg shall be taken to be the Chief Officer charged with the executive administration of a District in criminal matters.

22. The Governor General of India in Council may from time to time appoint any subject of Her Majesty to be Session Judge of Coorg, and may also from time to time suspend or remove any person so appointed.

Power to appoint Session Judge of Coorg.

The Session Judge shall, as often as may be necessary for the trial of offenders, hold sessions in the said Province. Provided that he and the Judicial Commissioner respectively may hear and determine appeals beyond the limits of the same Province.

23. Appeals from sentences and orders passed by the Superintendent or by any officer subordinate to him exercising full powers of a Magistrate, from which an appeal is allowed under the Code of Criminal Procedure, shall lie to the Judicial Commissioner, and shall be heard and determined by him:

Appeals from sentences of Superintendent and other Officers vested with full powers.

Provided that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prevent the Judicial Commissioner from exercising under the said Code all or any of the powers of the High Court vested in him.

24. All sentences and orders heretofore passed by the Superintendent of Ashtagram in his capacity of Session Judge of Coorg shall be deemed to be as valid as if this Act had then been passed, and he had been appointed, under section 22, Session Judge of Coorg.

Confirmation of sentences passed by Superintendent of Ashtagram.

25. The Code of Criminal Procedure shall extend to the said Province, and shall be deemed to have been in force therein from the ninth day of December 1862.

Extension of Code of Criminal Procedure.

MILITARY DEPARTMENT.

Simla, the 3rd October 1868.

No. 937 of 1868.—The services of Colonel Septimus Harding Becher, of the Bengal Staff Corps, being no longer required in the Account Branch of the Military Department, are placed at the disposal of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief from the 1st instant.

The 5th October 1868.

No. 938 of 1868.—The undermentioned Officer is permitted to proceed to Europe on furlough on private affairs:—

Captain Eugene Clutterbuck Impey, of the Bengal Staff Corps, Political Agent, Marwar ...	For 2 years, under the Regulations of 1868, from Bombay

No. 939 of 1868.—The services of Captain B. Rogers, of the Bengal Staff Corps, Officiating 2nd in Command, 16th (The Lucknow) Regiment of Native Infantry, are placed temporarily at the disposal of the Public Works Department.

The 6th October 1868.

No. 940 ~~of 1868~~.—The following military letter from the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India is published for general information:—

MILITARY. INDIA OFFICE;

No. 301. London, 31*st August* 1868.

To His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council.

SIR,—Some difficulty has been found in ascertaining the course adopted by the several Governments in India, with respect to the date from which the period of three (now reduced to two) years is reckoned, which an Officer is required to have served with a Regiment before entering the Staff Corps; and it does not appear whether, in the certificate of the Commanding Officer, the commencement of this period is taken from the date of first commission, from that of joining the depôt, from the date of embarkation for the country in which the Regiment may be serving, or from that of the Officer's doing duty with his Regiment.

2. It is obviously desirable that the same rule should be applied to all such cases in future; and it seems advisable, for the sake of uniformity, to fix the date of first commission for this purpose.

3. I have, therefore, to request that the necessary instructions may be issued to ensure the adoption of this course for the future.

I have, &c.,

No. 941 ~~of 1868~~.—The following military letter from the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India is published for general information:—

MILITARY. INDIA OFFICE;

No. 305. London, 31*st August* 1868.

To His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council.

SIR,—In the Royal Warrant of 1866, regulating the pay and promotion of Officers and Soldiers of Her Majesty's British Service elsewhere than in India, it is ruled, by Clause 287, that "a Surgeon of less than twenty years' full-pay service may be promoted to the rank of Surgeon Major for distinguished service."

2. Her Majesty's Government have determined that this regulation shall be held applicable to the Indian Medical Service. It is to be remembered that this promotion is not brevet, but substantive, and that it will carry with it the advantages of increased pay, &c., which appertain to the rank of Surgeon Major.

Clause 287.

3. You will observe that, by the enclosed extract of the Royal Warrant above mentioned, it is necessary that "the recommendation detailing the services for which the Officer is proposed for promotion for distinguished services shall be published in the General Orders of the Army and in the Gazette in which such promotion shall appear."

I have, &c.,

(Sd.) STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

Extract from the Royal Warrant, 1866, Part 1—Pay.

Promotion of Surgeon.

CLAUSE 287.—A Surgeon after twenty years' service in any rank shall be styled Surgeon Major, but a Surgeon of less than twenty years' full-pay service may be promoted to the rank of Surgeon Major for distinguished service. The recommendation detailing the services for which the Officer is proposed for promotion for distinguished service shall be published in the General Orders of the Army and in the Gazette in which such promotion shall appear.

No. 942 of 1868.—The services of Lieutenant G. L. M'L. Farmer, of the 60th Rifles, are placed at the disposal of the Government of Bengal.

The 7th October 1868.

No. 943 of 1868.—The following paragraphs of a military letter from the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India, No. 302, dated 31st August 1868, are published for general information:—

"PARA. 1.—I have to inform you that the following candidates having completed the course of instruction at the Army Medical School, and having been reported qualified, have been appointed Assistant Surgeons on the Bengal Establishment, their commissions as such bearing date 1st April 1868, viz.:—

David Douglas Cunningham, M.B.
Henry Whitwell.
Archibald Cameron, M.D.
Benjamin Evers.
James Charles Gordon Carmichael, M.D.
William Harvey.
Alexander Gibb Grant, M.B.
Warwick Jackson.
George Gilbert M'Laren, M.B.
Joseph Johnstone Monteath, M.D.
Richard Howell Stevens, M.B.

2. They have received instructions, with one exception hereafter noted, to proceed to Calcutta within two months from the 1st August 1868.

3. They will be entitled to count as service for full-pay pension the period of their residence at Netley from the 1st April to the 1st August.

No. 944 of 1868.—Sub-Conductor R. Busher, Overseer, Stud Department, is allowed leave of absence for one month from such date as he may avail himself of it, to visit the Presidency preparatory to applying for furlough to Europe.

No. 945 of 1868.—The Right Hon'ble the Governor General in Council has been pleased to determine that the qualification in the English language which will entitle Hospital Assistants and passed medical pupils to the increased rates of pay sanctioned in paragraph 36 of Goverment General Order No. 550 of 1868, shall be as follows:—

I.—The ability to read fluently and intelligently ordinary English prose; for instance, a page of any standard History of England or India.

II.—A fair knowledge of orthography, and the ability to write from dictation with a reasonable amount of correctness.

III.—A competent knowledge of simple arithmetic as far as the Rule of Three.

IV.—The ability to read and write English prescriptions intelligently.

2. The qualification of unpassed pupils must be judged of by the Medical Officers under whom they are placed, and should be such as to afford the prospect of their being qualified as above on passing their professional examination.

3. His Excellency in Council is further pleased to direct that the admission to an Hospital Assistant of the increased rate of pay (Rs. 40) after seven years' service, and again to a 1st Class Assistant of that (Rs. 60) after fourteen years' service, can only be sanctioned on the certificate of the Medical Officer, under whom the candidate may be serving, that he has not only maintained his previous knowledge, but also made fair progress in his aquaintance with the English language.

4. The allowance will be passed to Native Doctors now in the service (after they have been appointed to the grades mentioned in the order), whenever they shall be duly certified to be qualified as above required.

No. 946 of 1868.—The undermentioned Officer has reported his return from England:—

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

FOREIGN DEPARTMENT.

CENSUS TAKEN IN THE HYDERABAD ASSIGNED DISTRICTS

From J. G. CORDERY, ESQ., First Assistant Resident, Hyderabad, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, Simla,—No. 32, dated 1st September 1868.

I have the honor, under instructions from the Resident, to forward, for the information of the Government of India, ten (printed) copies of a report upon the census taken in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, in accordance with the instructions issued in your letter No. 1362 of 9th August 1867.

2. The length of time occupied in frequent references from Hyderabad to Berar, and the fact that what generalization was necessary was limited to two Commissioners' divisions only, induced Sir Richard Temple to place the preparation of the general report in the hands of Mr. A. C. Lyall, the Commissioner of West Berar, one of those divisions, who volunteered his assistance in the matter, and who, from having been personally engaged and interested in carrying out the details of the measure, was peculiarly qualified to furnish it.

3. The very able, lucid, and succinct manner in which the results of the measure have been summarized and tabulated by that officer, appears to Mr. Saunders to render it unnecessary for him to trouble the Government with any detailed re-capitulation of the results which have been already so well reported, more especially, as he has in his Annual Administration Report, now under submission to Government, entered at some length on the subject in reviewing the arrangements.

4. The accuracy of the figures, upon which his deductions have been based, depended mainly upon the forethought and care shown by the district officers in their preliminary arrangements. How they accomplished this duty is detailed in their reports, which are printed as appendices to Mr. Lyall's. And the Resident may with confidence express his concurrence in the opinion that their exertions have been as successful as they were creditable, and that no material error will be discoverable in the returns.

5. He would also bring to notice the commendable manner in which the Police and the whole educational staff, together with all the rank and file of Government employés, co-operated with the civil officers, both in preparing the minds of the people for the measure and in the actual work of enumeration. The absence of any panic or any opposition may be also quoted as speaking well for the general intelligence of the province.

From A. C. LYALL, ESQ., Commissioner, West Berar, to the First Assistant Resident, Hyderabad,—No. 1170, dated 18th April 1868.

I have the honor to submit a report of the census taken in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, under the orders conveyed by your letter No. 2064, dated 23rd August 1867. I also annex tabular statements in which the general results have been abstracted for each district, and in which the statistics thus obtained have been compared and classified.

2. I must explain that the orders above quoted were received by me while I was officiating as Commissioner of the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, and that it was agreed subsequently between the Commissioner of East Berar and myself that I should undertake the preparation of abstract tables for the entire province. It was manifestly necessary that the whole business should be made over to one officer, because separate divisional compilations would have increased the labor, while they would have been of much less real value. In fact, it would have been scarcely worth while to collate or generalize upon figures taken from one division only; and as the work of amalgamating the returns involved constant references to district officers and original papers, it would not have been accomplished for the whole province at Hyderabad without much difficulty and delay. But the Resident is, of course, aware that the conduct and superintendence of the actual taking of the census and of the preparation of district returns were entirely managed by the Commissioner of East Berar for his own division, and that I have drawn up this report in consultation and concert with Colonel Stubbs.

3. A copy of the instructions issued to Deputy Commissioners was sent to your office. The census was made by numbering all the persons present in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts during the night of the 7th and 8th November 1867. The enumeration was taken from house to house; the word "house" meaning a separate tenement or set of rooms inhabited by one family, and including a serai, temple, mosque, tomb, or any inhabited building; while persons sleeping in the open air, encamped, or moving along roads, were brought upon the return of the town or village within the area of which they were found. A separate return (in the form given in appendix) was required from each village; several returns from the larger towns. The Tehseeldars prepared accurate lists of the number of returns to be collected from the villages in their respective talooquahs, the larger towns were parcelled off into manageable sub-divisions, and special arrangements were made with the Commanding Officer at Ellichpore for taking the numbers in that Cantonment.

4. The persons appointed to be enumerators were the village and pergunnah officers (Deshpandiahs, Potels, Putwarees, &c.), assisted and superintended by the Police, the schoolmasters, and the whole rank and file of Government officers. There were also a few paid enumerators employed for the towns. Before the night of the 7th November, all the houses in every township had been counted, the serial number had been marked on the wall, and the corresponding figure had been entered, with the owners' name and profession, in the printed return which had been given to each enumerator, who began to fill up the remaining columns immediately after dark on the evening of the census night. It was arranged to number all persons who should alight at railway stations within Berar from trains during that night; each English householder filled in a separate form, and from the heads of the Customs and Police, returns were obtained of the number of persons belonging to their departments.

5. Thus a vast majority of the people were numbered at night, but in the wilder tracts of jungle or hill country, in outlying hamlets, or isolated huts, in camps of Brinjarees, or of wandering tribes, the census was made during the preceding day, and the persons so numbered were strictly enjoined to remain at home for the night. In the letters which are attached to this report, the Deputy Commissioners give detailed accounts of the manner in which they employed the means of which they could dispose for organizing and carrying out this extensive and complicated undertaking. These details, with the descriptions of how the work was done, of what actually went on in each district during the numbering, and of the general feelings and behaviour of the people, seem to me sufficiently interesting and useful to deserve a place in any general report that may be submitted to the Government. I have, therefore, not attempted to give any sketch or narrative of these proceedings.

6. It will be seen that Return A gave the caste and calling of each person in every house. Enumerators were directed to enter castes or tribes in the fullest variety of detail, and of course the caste entry included the whole family (of persons akin), but under the column for callings were numbered only the adult males, and no females, except prostitutes. This was so ordered by me with the object of ascertaining exactly the number of effective males in each profession, but I now wish that it had not been attempted. Infants were defined to be persons under 13 years.

7. The enumerators were placed in divisions under the superintendence of qualified officers of the higher grades. When the returns had been given in, the assistant in charge of the talooquah, with the Tehseeldar and the Superintendents above mentioned, tested closely a good many of the papers by personal enquiry, taking houses at random and counting them. Mistakes were corrected, the addition of the figures in the abstracts endorsed on each return was scrutinized, and then the papers were made over to the Tehseeldar for preparation of the Talooquah Return B.

8. On the whole, I believe that the Deputy Commissioners have very good reason for stating that the census has been taken most accurately and comprehensively, and I submit that this result is very creditable to all the district officers, by whose exertions it has been secured. They devoted to this work their time and attention for many days; they laid out their plans with careful forethought, and executed them with skill and success. I may also say that the good sense, good temper, and intelligence displayed by the people of Berar were very encouraging.

9. In framing the instructions for this census, I borrowed freely from the circular orders (partly adopted from the old North-Western Provinces census report), under which a census of the Central Provinces was taken in 1866. I re-cast and modified these orders, adding some details, and I altered the form of the return to be filled up by each enumerator. This form tabulated the great divisions of sex, age, caste, and calling; and the Deputy Commissioners have compiled lists of the castes and callings in each district. They were also asked to add sketches of the principal classes, with any particulars that could be collected respecting the origin, social status, religious belief, or peculiar mode of life of the tribes or sects mentioned in their returns. The information thus collected will be found in the letters appended, but in re-arranging this material for the general tables annexed to this report, I have followed mainly my own conclusions or theories upon questions of caste or creed.

STATISTICAL TABLES.

10. No general returns beyond the Talooquah Statement B were required from the districts, because I intended to have them prepared in my office from the vernacular papers. But the Deputy Commissioners voluntarily compiled several useful abstracts and lists, of which I gladly availed myself in making up the series of tables which is now submitted :—

No. I.—Shows area, number of towns and houses with the population as it is distributed over the area.

No. II.—Shows the grouping of population in towns and villages.

No. III.—Is a table of the land revenue and cultivation compared with area and population.

No. IV.—Shows proportions of sexes and ages.

No. V.—Classifies adult males according to their employments.

No. VI.—Gives the number of blind, lame, &c.

No. VII.—Gives some criminal statistics, and

No. VIII.—With appendices shows the principal divisions of caste and creed.

11. I proceed to offer some comments upon the figures thus tabulated.

12. The total population of Berar is 2,231,565, with an area of 17,334 square miles. In Part I, Volume XI of the Annals of Indian Administration, which gives statistics for all India, the population and area of Berar are set down as 1,535,935 and 17,334, so that the actual considerably exceeds the estimated population. We are still uncertain about the exact area of the whole province, for a part of Mehkur and all the large district of Woon still remain to be surveyed, but for this table I have taken the accepted estimate.

Table I.

13. The average density to the square mile in Berar is 128—a number higher than in any division of the neighbouring Central Provinces, though far below the average for the North-West Provinces. This average indicates a paucity of population, which is remarkable when it is contrasted with the cultivated area. In the subjoined table, I compare Berar with the districts of the North-Western Provinces, which come nearest to it in percentage of cultivation on area and in average density on the square mile :—

	Percentage of cultivation.	Average density.
Banda (1853)	43·9	247
Lullutpore (1865)	17·1	127
N. W. Provinces Terraie (1865)	18·9	125
Berar (1867)	43 1	128

14. It will be seen that, where the North-West percentage of cultivation is the same, the average density is very much greater; and that where the average densities tend to come to a single, the North-West percentage of cultivation is far lower. The percentage of non-agriculturists on the whole population of Berar is very nearly the same with the percentage on the total Hindu population of the North-West Provinces :—

Berar	38·7	North-West Provinces	38·04

And almost all the cultivators in Berar must be Hindus.

15. Here I insert also a table borrowed from the Central Provinces census report, the Berar statistics having been now added for comparison :—

Persons to the square mile in

Berar.		Central Provinces.		Punjab.		Bombay.		Madras
Akolah	191	Nursingpore	176	Thaneysur	212	Tannah	150	Cannanore	140
Oomrawuttee, including Ellichpore	139	Nagpore	172	Lahore	209	Ahmedabad	149	Vellore	123
Mehkur	117	Wurdah	144	Goojeranwalla	147	Sholapore	135	Guntoor	119

16. Of the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, Akolah has the largest total population, and the highest average per square mile, though it would rank very low indeed among North-Western Districts. It contains also by far the largest agricultural population (71·6 per cent.), and very much the greatest number of houses. Here are fewer villages in all than Woon; but Table II will show that Akolah has more towns numbering above 5,000 souls than any other district, and the low average number in each house when compared with the high average per square mile indicates superior comfort and good house-room. On the other hand, Woon has the widest area with the lowest average per square mile, and the largest number of villages with the least proportionate number of houses. The average per house is nevertheless as high as elsewhere, and Table II proves that all but 50 of the inhabited places contain less than 1,000 souls, so that we have for this district clear signs of a thin and poor population closely packed in petty villages. Yet the average of population to the square mile in Woon is well above the average for the Central Provinces, and the density in Chanda (which adjoins Woon on the east) is only 54 to 86 on this side of the Wurdah river.

17. Next to Akolah in the total number of inhabitants, and in their average to the square mile, comes Oomrawuttee District, which contains the second largest town in Berar, and is strong in substantial villages, as will be seen from Table II.

18. Mehkur is the upland district lying beyond the range of hills which bound the Poorna valley on the south, and slope down by steppes toward the Nizam's country; it is neither so well populated, nor so widely cultivated as the valley.

19. Ellichpore has some good towns in the plain under the Sautpoorahs, but this district includes the wild hill tracts of Mailghat, and these reduce its total average of people to the square mile very much below Akolah and Oomrawuttee, which lie entirely in the valley and contain the prime lands of Berar.

Table II.

20. In Table II Akolah shows the greatest number of towns, as Oomrawuttee of substantial villages. Ellichpore is the largest town in the province, having 27,782 people, and the smallest habitation under a separate name is a village in Mailghat consisting of one hut, which is specifically recorded by Lieutenant Mackenzie. Ellichpore is a decayed Mahometan town of some antiquity; it was the seat of local government under more than one dynasty, but the great trading marts of Berar are Oomrawuttee and Khamgaon, which contain respectively 23,410 and 8,472.

Table III.

21. I have already mentioned that in taking the census, only the callings or professions of adult males were set down, and that I have since regretted that this was done, because I have had no time to take out from the returns the women and children belonging to each profession; and of course the women and children of agriculturists and artizans do assist the males very much in their work. However, the proportions of sexes and ages have enabled me to make an approximate calculation of the number of women and children to be added to each division of adult males.

22. Columns 13 and 14 give the adult males under each class, and (18) their proportion; while under columns 16 and 17, the whole agricultural and non-agricultural population of all sexes and ages has been estimated (as a basis for the proportion in column 19) by adding to the known number of adult males in each class the ascertained percentages of females and infants to all the adult males. This calculation cannot be far wrong, because the sum total of the whole population obtained by adding together the figures deduced from these averages only differs from the known sum total by 1,950.

23. The proportion of cultivated to uncultivated land is greatest in Akolah District,* where it is extraordinarily high, and smallest in Ellichpore, where it is thrown out of balance by the Mailghat jungles; but the revenue rate per acre indicates that Woon is really the poorest, as Akolah is the richest, of these districts. In this latter district, the proportion of agriculturists to non-agriculturists (columns 16 and 17) is high (higher for instance than in Rohilkund of the North-Western Provinces), yet for a tract with only 191 persons to the square mile, the preponderance of cultivation and the sum total of land revenue are still very remarkable. It is very difficult to draw any conclusions at all from these figures as to the comparative state of agriculture in Berar, or as to the productive powers of the soil. Columns 20 and 21 give approximate proportions of the number of acres (1) to each person, and (2) to each agricultural male; but I believe that in the country a great many artizans own bits of land and till them, so that the agricultural male adults must be much under-stated; while the number of cultivated acres to each man is alone no test of productive powers of the soil, or of the state of its culture. I have not attempted to eliminate the food-producing area, for without an accurate return of exports and imports, it is impossible to tell how many mouths that area actually feeds, but I have noted the percentage of land under cotton. The number of cultivated acres to each man is highest in the best cultivated districts which grow the more valuable crops, and lowest where cultivation is proportionately less and poorer. This is not because the produce per acre is least where the cultivated area is widest, but because in tracts where the tillage is very extensive and spreading the total number of acres to be divided by the population is larger, and the quotient of course greater; whereas in sparsely cultivated countries the number of acres to be divided is small, while the number of people depends on many causes beside the food produced by the soil on which they live. So we have the average breadth of cultivation to each person smallest in Woon, where the wild tribes live on forest produce, game, and fish, and burden the cultivated area very little, although the percentage of non-agriculturists ranges much higher than elsewhere. A similar result is obtained even by taking the average of cultivated acreage to each agricultural male, because the position of each district, its trade, the nature of its population baffle any attempt to calculate by the simple process of dividing cultivated acres by population. Some experiments are about to be made for testing the average produce per acre in Berar; the cultivators ordinarily say that a good crop of wheat on the best land is twenty-fold of the seed, which sounds incredible.

24. Table IV exhibits the proportions of ages and sexes. The statistics of this sort that were obtained by the North-Western Provinces census of 1865 are the first that have been scientifically examined in India, and compared with statistics of Europe. I may, perhaps, be permitted very cautiously to follow up the novel and interesting line of enquiry thus opened out.

25. I take first the proportion of children under 13 years to adults. In the North-Western Provinces persons above 12 were reckoned as adults, but the difference is inconsiderable, because neither census could draw the line accurately where ages are only approximately known.

26. The following table gives the proportions between children and adults in:—

Percentage of children to adults.

England.
Under 12 years	...	29·44	...	See para. 64, N. W. P. Report.
N. W. Provinces.
Under 12 years	...	35·58	...	See para. 76, „
Berar.
Under 13 years	...	55·4	...

27. Mr. Plowden was startled by the abnormal excess of children in the North-Western Provinces as compared with European proportions, and was led (paragraphs 70—71) to doubt the accuracy of his returns. But the Berar figures, though they may not be quite correct, do nevertheless support and corroborate the statistics of the North-Western Provinces, by showing that the high rate there is quite probable, for in no district of Berar does the proportion sink to within 10 per cent. of the highest return from a North-West district.

28. The first and simplest cause of the greater proportionate number of children in Berar as compared with the North-West is the higher percentage of females in this country. But this only makes explanation more difficult, at first sight, of the disproportion between Berar and England, where the females out-number the males. I do not venture to discuss this complicated question at length, nor am I competent to work out the problem. But the Secretary to the North-West Revenue Board considers that the high percentage of children indicates a great waste of life in later years (page 70); whereas I suspect this result to be connected more with the births than with the deaths. It must be influenced to a certain degree by the average duration of life, which average, however, depends again on the number of births to a given number of the population. If the number of births to each 10,000 of the population in a year be much greater in India than in Europe, then would not the proportion of children to adults be always greater? Now we know that the proportion of children to adults is low in France as compared with most other countries of Europe, that the number of annual births to the 10,000 is also very low, and that it has been decreasing to an alarming extent. The causes alleged (one of which is the vast army kept up) are of a kind not likely to exist in India, where all ranks and classes are anxious to have children, where there is no service which, like the French Army, condemns to celibacy, where the population has room to expand, and where, consequently, every one marries who can afford to marry. It is possible, therefore, that the larger proportion of children in the North-West Provinces may thus be partially accounted for. The excess in Berar over the North-Western Provinces may indicate a still larger number of annual births to the population, which may have been caused by the great and sudden prosperity of late years in this province, and by peculiar social customs to be mentioned hereafter. I myself believe that the ages in Berar have been given with very fair approximate truth, since the people are less sensitive about such enquiries than in other parts of India, and the village officers would correct any glaring mis-statement. But no doubt the tendency would be to under-state, though the high comparative percentage would still, I think, remain if we were to assume that all persons under 15 were really set down as children.

29. The separate ratio of girls to women and boys to men show that the higher proportion of children is among males, as in the North-Western Provinces. Probably this indicates a greater proportionate waste of adult male life and some male emigration.

Berar.	Proportion of girls to 100 women	53
	„ boys to 100 men	57

30. The proportion between the sexes is compared with results from other parts of India in the subjoined table :—

Females.	Proportion of Females to Males.
	All ages.	Adults.	Infants.
North-Western Provinces	46·38	47·50	44·
Central Provinces	48·8	50·	47·
Berar	48·3	48·8	46·9

31. We see here that two rules, of which Berar is the most recent illustration, prevail throughout the population of a vast extent of country :—

(1).—That the males out-number the females.

(2).—That this predominance is much greater among infant males than among adult males, the females gaining ground considerably in even twelve years.

32. If Statement A of the census report for the Central Provinces be correct, this second rule prevails in some districts there to a wonderful extent. Take, for instance, the figures for Bhundara and Raipore in 1866 :—

	Males.		Females.
	Adults.	Children.	Adults.	Children.
Bhúndara	215,257	159,655	229,626	143,623
Raipore	251,889	229,521	274,513	196,831

which show that the female children were in 1866 much fewer than the male children; while the women out-numbered the men. Whatever may be the exactitude of these returns, we know that in Europe female life is every where slightly better than male life, and all our figures point toward the same law in India. Therefore we may conclude that, barring foul play, the excess of male children over female is certainly not higher than the proportion of male births to female births, since girls are more likely to live. And we arrive at the curious question, examined with so much ingenious illustration in the North-Western Provinces census report, whether the great predominance of male births in India can in any way be explained.

33. Two theories, based upon the results of enquiries by European statisticians, were applied to account for this difference between Europe and the North-West Provinces:—

(1).—It was supposed that the number of male births might be greater in warm than in temperate climates.

(2).—It was conjectured that the greater difference of age between husband and wife in India, as compared with England, might cause more males to be born, in accordance with a tendency observed in Europe.

34. The census of the Central Provinces and of Berar throw very little additional light upon these suppositions, nor is it easy to make even a conjecture at the cause for the greater number of females here as compared with the North-West. The climate must, of course, have some influence on all physiological phœnomena, but though the heat is less here than farther north, the cold is much milder. It will be observed that the proportion between sexes of all ages in Berar nearly coincides with the ratio found in the Central Provinces.

35. But in truth, a solution to these problems can only be approached by collecting and comparing with statistics every sort of fact that bears upon the social and physical differences between Europeans and Indians. Thus I give here a few notes which may possibly be turned to some use.

36. Appendix B to the Bombay census report for 1864 gives the most bewildering variety of proportions of male babies to female babies in different races. Perhaps the most extraordinary thing is that the preponderance of male infants aged not more than 30 days is far highest among Europeans, being as five to one. The next highest proportion is among the Parsees (194·44 to 100), and it would appear that the difference of age between a Parsee husband and wife is rather more than in England, for of 458 Parsee marriages in 1866, 261 males were above 18, but only 25 females. The subjoined table is given to show how suddenly the male excess subsides in the next periods:—

Proportion of Males to 100 Females.

	Days 1—30	Months 1—23	Years 1—5
Parsees	194·44 ..	108·01 ...	102·16
Europeans	500·00 ...	113·43 ...	116·25

37. The proportions between adults of either sex are of hardly any value when taken from the floating and changing population of Bombay.

38. Returning to Berar, I may mention two social customs that might be found to influence the numbers of the sexes, if marriage statistics could be got. One is the custom of widow re-marriage, which prevails throughout the province (except among Brahmins and a few north-country traders), whereby many more marriages are contracted with women quite grown up than in Northern India. The other custom prevails throughout India, and is one of the most notable social distinctions between Asia and Europe,—I mean polygamy. The main cause of this custom is the desire to have male issue, and Hindus will marry as many wives as they can afford to keep until a son is born,—the difference in age (and therefore, perhaps, the probability of success) increasing with every marriage.* I do not found any theories upon these facts, I only mention them as prominently characteristic of the relations of the sexes in these districts.

39. I believe that celibacy (of male or female) is even more uncommon here than in Northern India, where again it is much less common than in Europe; and it is just possible that this may have some bearing on the different proportions between adults and infants by raising the annual birth-rate in India.

40. If I were to hazard any guess at the reason for the difference in the proportions of males to females in India and Europe, I should point rather to the later age at which European women marry than to the interval of age between the pair. When we know that almost all Indian girls (except among Marwarrees and Parsees) are married by 14 years, and when we compare this fact with the returns given in the Statistical Journal for June 1866, which state that of English women between 15 and 20 years, 97·5 per cent. were unmarried in 1851, and of those between 20 and 30 years, 56·2 per cent., we may infer that this wide difference between the ages at which women marry in India and England must produce some perceptible physiological variation. Is it not probable that the female element is stronger when a woman of 25 marries a man of any age, than when girls of 13 marry youths from 15 to 18 years of age?

Table IV.

41. At the foot of Table IV, the returns for Mailghat are given separately, although they are also included in the Ellichpore return. This tract lies entirely within the Sautpoorah hills, and four-fifths of the population are the tribes called aboriginal. The uniformity of the proportions and the high percentage of female children indicate some peculiarities of physique or habits of life which invite further research. The figures are taken from Lieutenant Mackenzie's report, which is well worth perusal.

Table V.

42. The form of Table V and the principle of classification have been borrowed from the North-Western Provinces census report. In Berar the most numerous class are the agriculturists, next come the non-agricultural day-labourers, for whom work is plentiful just now in this province; the manufacturing classes are probably few by comparison with other parts of India, since Berar lives mainly by exchanging its raw produce for manufactures and metals with Bombay.

43. The lists of professions compiled by the Deputy Commissioners are sent with their reports for reference if required, and some of the reports have conveniently grouped the district populations under their principal callings or means of livelihood.

Table VI.

44. I have no materials for comparing the figures of this table with similar returns from other parts of India, except the town of Bombay (1864), which is a society quite abnormal. The Bombay census report gives one blind to 1,503 persons in Bombay, and notes that [illegible] were—

In the United Kingdoms		In the United States
1 Blind to 996.		1 Blind to 1,503.

1 Blind to 263.

45. This rather incredible result for Berar is being tested by actual examination of a certain number of persons returned as blind, and a supplementary memorandum will follow. At present it must be surmised that all people with defective vision, dim-eyed old men and the like, have been called blind; but I doubt whether natives would enter under this category those who have lost one eye. In India, as in most other countries, the word for one-eyed man is quite separate from the word meaning blind.

46. Table VII is not prepared from the census papers, but from the jail returns. It is appended to this report in order to guide any comparisons that may be made between the statistics of crime and the statistics of population by showing that the element of age is an essential item in every such analysis of relative amounts of crime. This return illustrates very fairly the general rules known to prevail in England:—

(1).—That the tendency to crime is far stronger at an earlier than a later age.

(2).—That a great proportionate majority of offences (especially violent offences) are committed between 21 and 30 years; so that we cannot usefully compare returns of crime from different districts or provinces, unless we have some idea of the proportion to the population of persons belonging to the criminal ages. This table has of course been suggested to me by English tables of the kind.

Table VIII.

47. I am not sure that Table VIII is worth the trouble which has been expended in compiling it and drawing up the appendices. The Deputy Commissioners were good enough to devote much time and labour, which they could ill spare from other work, to the preparation of ample lists of castes and tribes, but as no exact principle of classification had been prescribed, these lists could not be summarized or amalgamated without much re-arrangement. The object has been to define the various denominations by placing them in categories or classes, whence some understanding may be obtained of the actual state of existing social and religious institutions here in Berar. And the difficulty has been to distinguish between sects, races, professions, or pure castes. For the whole tendency of Hindu society seems to be toward a continual "morcellement." Where tribal distinctions have blended into nationalities according to the ordinary civilizing process, the community, instead of becoming homogeneous, is continually being split up by diversities of creed, manner of life, or profession into bodies which only eat and inter-marry among themselves, thereby preserving isolation. New prophets are continually arising, who lead away disciples and found heresies; certain shrines come into fashion, and the devotees become known by a separate name, or a peculiar worship: holy men are canonized constantly after death (as miracle working saints), or even attain apotheosis as incarnations of the elder gods, and these also have their recognized followers. Then we have laymen, who have turned religious anchorites, changing their names, and men who, bearing the title of some religious order, have long ago taken to worldly callings, so that any classification based on mere denominations must lead to confusion. Therefore I have made the classes in Table VIII very broad, and I have only added a few details in the appendices.

Mussulmans. See Appendix I.

48. The Mussulmans bear a proportion of 6·94 per cent. to the whole population. The categories given in Appexdix I are very ill defined, and of course the name "Sheikh" means only that no particular descent or opinions are claimed, while the name "Pathan" carries with it a flavour of foreign birth and the profession of arms.

49. Most of the settled Mahometans must have descended from the men who originally followed the invaders of the Deccan from the north. All the Bheels, who live along the skirts of the Sautpoorahs, appear to have embraced Islamism, though they do not inter-marry with the purer Mahometans, and the list shows that there are 127 converts who were not born in the faith. The clear, precise, and unmistakeable nature of the Mahometan belief, carrying one plain straight line up to heaven, like a tall obelisk pointing direct to the sky without shadow of turning, has maintained general unity of Mahometan belief in a country where sects take root and spring up as easily as bamboos. The Bhora is, I believe, the only heretic of Indian origin in these parts.

50. For the Hindus the old Vedic division into four great castes has been maintained simply because no better could be found, though in fact only the Brahmins have kept up the demarcation. The Brahmins of Berar belong almost entirely by origin to Maharashtra.

51. The Kshutriya class contains mostly a set of very dubious pretenders to the honor of Rajpoot descent. Mahrattas of no particular family usually call themselves Thakoors—even a Koonbee will occasionally try to elevate himself thereby, while Purbhoos, Kayuths, and other castes of mixed origin and good social status are constantly invading this military order. The distinction is also claimed by the Rajahs of the Sautpoorah hills, who assert that they are Rajpoots depressed by the necessities of mountain life, whereas they are Gonds or Korkoos elevated by generations of highland chieftainship. Here and there in Berar are colonies of undoubted Rajpoot origin, but the only pure Rajpoot family, in the Rajpootana sense, which I have yet discovered, is the house of the Jadow Rajahs of Sindkhair, which inter-marries with the noblest clans of Rajpootana, and which has lately made a show of great reluctance to permit a poor kinsman to espouse the Guicowar's daughter.

VAISYAS.

52. Under this heading are placed all the commercial classes of Hindus, the north-country Marwarees and Augurwallas, with those who are known by the general term Bunya, and a few castes like the Komtees from the south, or the Lars,* who do not seem to be well known out of Berar. It must be explained, however, that many persons who have been numbered under "Hindu Sects" are traders by profession.

* The Killadar of Asseergurh, when the English invested it, was Jeswunt Rao Lar.

SUDRAS.

53. This division, of course, includes the bulk of the population and the great majority of the industrial classes. A footnote to Table VIII gives the numbers in the principal sub-castes, which are usually identical with the callings practised, according to the rule of separation and isolation above noticed. Very many of these have entered various religious sects, and are also numbered under those denominations.

54. First on the list come the great cognate agricultural communities of Koonbees and Malees, among whom are many sub-divisions and specific diversities with separate names; but I believe that here, as in Mysore, they all eat together, although they do not inter-marry. Koonbees and Malees eat flesh, drink liquor moderately, and their widows may always remarry if they choose, excepting the widows of Deshmooks, who ape high caste prejudices. The Koshtees or weaving castes are well known. The Bunjaras are comparatively numerous in this province, their occupation as carriers and travelling commissariat is rapidly going, and during their transitional stage, they give a good deal of trouble to the Police. The Dhungurs are sheep farmers, and Hutkur is the name of one of their clans, which still holds much land on the border of the Nizam's territory, and was not long ago notorious for pugnacity and rebellion.

55. I give the numbers of the Bhoee, because he has recently fallen under suspicion of belonging to a widely spread primitive tribe; and the Garpugarees are counted, because it can hardly be credited that so many live by this profession, which consists simply in conjuring away hailstorms. Any one who has watched the medicine man at work has witnessed a relic of pure Fetichism, possibly handed down from the præ-Aryan races and their earliest liturgies.

56. The Vidoors and Krishnapukshees are really the same; they are the descendants of Brahmins by women of inferior caste, and Krishnapukshees is, I am told, only astronomical metaphor for describing a half breed, the term meaning literally "dark fortnight" and referring to the half darkened orb of the.

OUT-CASTES.

57. Appendix II gives a list of the classes who cannot strictly be placed in any caste system, although they adore after their own fashion Hindu deities, and gradually adopt Hindu prejudices as they rise in the world. These are the tribes whom Mr. George Campbell calls "Helots;" they have probably a strong infusion of the blood of the aboriginal races, whatever this may have been, though it may be conjectured that a line drawn between people of Aryan and Turanian origin would relegate to the latter family all the Sudras of this part of India.

58. The Mhars have been taken to be the same with the Dhers, a very useful and active tribe in this country. The Mangs appear to be the lowest in the social scale of all numerous bodies. The paucity of the Khakrobs or Bhungees, who are so strong up-country, is a serious sanitary difficulty. The Kaikarees are a tribe formerly well known for their thieving habits.

ABORIGINES.

59. By aborigines are meant either those tribes who have not yet scattered themselves abroad among the inhabitants of the plains, but who live together in bodies, observing peculiar customs, and sometimes speaking their own dialects, or dispersed families who have mixed with the general population, but whose name and appearance stamp them as belonging to the aboriginal types. The Gonds, Korkoos, and Bheels are the only completely preserved specimens of tribes. The two first retain their languages, while Bheel tongue seems to have become extinct very recently in Berar (like the Cornish in England); its disuse being probably expedited by their general conversion to Mahometanism.

60. The Ramosee is said by Grant Duff to be of different tribe from the Bheel. The original Purdhan among the Gonds answered to the Bhat among the Hindus, but many seem to have settled as a separate species of Gond in the plains.

61. The Kolees have among them several substantial Potels, and they have fairly reached the agricultural stage of society here. They are said to form two distinct tribes, one of which has apparently been reclaimed from a wild life more recently than the other, which still claims certain rights granted at a time when the Kolees, under their naiks or chiefs, guarded the hill passes and kept for Government the highlands of the Balaghat. The Ands, Aurukhs, and Kolams are curious races, about whom I have yet collected no information. The Ands are cultivators, they eat all kinds of meat, and bury their dead; but they won't feast on dead cattle, as a Dher will, and a Brahmin will visit them on ceremonial occasions. The Kolams belong to Woon, the Lujjurs are mostly hewers of wood on the fringes of the Sautpoorah hills, and the Mehals are known to be drudges under the Gonds.

Hindu Sects.

62. A disquisition upon the various sects which are catalogued in this appendix is out of place here, because none of them are peculiar to Berar. But some mention of their distinctive tenets may be added to this return of their numbers, in order to mark the direction as well as the strength of the currents now prevailing in the boundless sea of Hindu religion.

63. The Lingaets are very well known in Western and Southern India; they have merely adopted a special outward sign of their adoration of one emblem of Siva. If it be true that they usually bury their dead, this peculiarity may show that they consider their bodies set apart and sanctified to the divinities, but I do not know that they represent any separate dogma or moral conviction. Like all the leading Hindu sects, the Lingaets muster a strong following among the trading classes.

Jain.

64. Jain is the name of the famous religion professed by Suraogees. Almost all the Marwarees of Berar belong to this remarkable heresy, which is perhaps founded on a sort of Protestantism, an assertion of the right to worship without Brahmanical intermediation, so that, in this case, we are interested in statistics which may measure the flow or ebb of the tide. The tailors are numerous among the Jains, as in other sects which lean toward speculative doctrine and spiritual independence —occupations which are sedentary, social, and which do not hinder conversation, breed irreverent free thinking in religion and politics all the world over. For instance, the Bishnoees of Berar are nearly all Simpees,* and their tenets stamp them as decidedly Broad Church; they have recently had a secession from their main body of the more advanced brethren, who eat and drink forbidden victuals, under the special dispensation of a holy man, whom they adopted after death as their patron saint.

65. The existence in Berar of even 18 Rai Dasis should not be unnoticed, for these form another branch from the same stock with the Sutnamees, who have had such prodigious success among the Chumars of Chutteesgurh in the Central Provinces. Both sects are known in Hindustan and the Punjab, and as their votaries always belong mainly to the lowest castes, while their tendency is against idolatry and Pharisaic intolerance, it is important to watch the spread of this resistance to corrupt and conservative Brahmanism.

66. Perhaps the most curious of all the Berar sectaries are the Man Bhows, an order of Cœnobites which really reproduces some of the characteristics of medieval monasticism. Its numbers are of both sexes; they are vowed to celibacy, though they form one community; they wear black clothes, and as not only the males but the females shave the head, the latter bear a startling resemblance to European nuns. They wander about the country in bands, and often receive into their fraternity children, whom the people devote to a religious life in performance of vows made. They seem to be venerated by the people, though they are detested by the Brahmins with a venomous hatred. They are connected with the Jye Kisheneeas of the Punjab, but one of their principal monasteries or "Mhutts" is at Rithpore, near Ellichpore, and they seem to reside all over Maharashtra. A curious account of them in the Madras Journal for 1836 was pointed out to me by Doctor Balfour, Inspector General of Hospitals. Some of them have married and settled down in villages; * their preaching is very anti-Brahminical.

67. Of the remaining denominations, the Nanukshahees have their own sacred books, but the rest may be described generally as mere religious vagrants and professed ascetics, not heretical dissidents, but persons who carry orthodoxy to its extreme. Nevertheless, any statistics that would measure the decadence of asceticism and religious mendicancy would be worth having, for it cannot be doubted that they must be rapidly decaying; I observe that the Suniasees who represent the Brahmins that have abandoned the joys of this world are ominously few, and though the Gosains are numerous, yet it must be recollected that very many of these have long ago returned to a secular life, and have merely inherited the name.

68. I have made this dissertation as brief as it could be, but I must again ask to be excused for entering upon matters theological, on the plea that even these statistics may have some positive value. If, for example, we could ascertain by our periodical census that the numbers of ascetics and religious vagrants were rapidly diminishing, and that during the same period, the free-thinking or independent sects were fast increasing (as I believe them to be), either by the creation of new sects, or the reinforcement of old ones, we should thus be able to chronicle a remarkable phase in the development of national thought and convictions. Such signs and tokens might ever be allowed to have a kind of political importance, although it would of course be a kind far inferior to statistics of an increase in the total population, the spread of agriculture, the import of cotton piece goods, and other evidences of great material prosperity.

COMMR.'S OFFICE, WEST BERAR,
AKOLAH;
The 18th April 1868.

A. C. LYALL,
Commissioner, West Berar.

From R. HUDLESTON, ESQ., Deputy Commissioner, Akolah District, to the Commissioner, West Berar,—No. 716, dated 28th February 1868.

In compliance with your Circular No. 1, dated 16th September 1867, appointing the night of the 7th and 8th November for a general census, I have the honor to forward the subjoined abstract talooquah statements B, with form A returns annexed for the Akolah district.

2. On the receipt of orders for a census, the Assistant Commissioners in charge of the talooks, under directions from this office, lost no time in perfecting their arrangements, and during the intervening seven weeks, everything was ready for the enumeration on the night of the 7th and 8th November. There was a talook for each officer, except Captain Laughton, who held charge of Mulkapore and Julgaum talooks, and I was enabled to aid him shortly before the appointed date by sending Mr. FitzGerald to Nandoorah.

3. Further assistance was obtained from the Educational and Police Establishments. The treasury was shut for a few days before the census, and all the Native clerks at head quarters and in the district courts were detailed upon the duty. In the Akote talook the survey party now employed there gave all the aid in their power.

4. At first I thought 200 houses might be entrusted to each enumerator, provided his lists were perfected in time, and left for verification only upon the night of the census. But further enquiry led me to reduce this considerably, and the actual average number of houses done by each of them has been 116 houses. Moreover, the period for preparation was so short that but little more than mere verbal instructions to the officials employed could take place before the enumeration was actually carried out, and, therefore, it was better to have too many numberers than too few. Altogether 1,405 enumerators were employed, each doing on an average 116 houses.

5. In carrying out another census, I would certainly have not only the first three columns of statement A, but all the papers fully filled up and properly tested prior to the appointed day, leaving simply further verifications and alterations and corrections on account of movements and strangers to be done on the actual date of census.

6. Nearly every town was personally visited either by the assistant in charge of the talook, or by the tehsildar immediately before the census took place. Large meetings where the enumerators were thoroughly instructed were also held at convenient localities; and while the enumeration was going on, and for some days previously, every available officer was out in the talooks. I may mention here that Mr. Bymanjee, who was in charge of the Akolah talook, had all the circulars and orders printed for more expeditious circulation.

7. Each enclosure and house was permanently numbered in the lists of each numberer, with the name, &c., of the house-owner.

8. The enumerators were the Putwarries, and in some cases the Potels. Both these officials being hereditary are intimately acquainted with the villages, and have the confidence of the people among whom they live. In a matter of this kind, they easily obtain the assistance of their relations, so that even where the Putwarrie is a non-resident, or holds more than one village, it is not difficult to find a brother or other relative nearly as efficient as the Putwarrie himself. In the large villages and towns, the Native clerks and schoolmasters and chief constables were of necessity detailed for this work, and appointed to circles composed of portions or mahullas of towns, outlying suburbs, and separate encampments.

9. Again, each talook was divided into divisions according to the means at our disposal. The Deshpandias and Deshmooks had the charge of these, which varied in extent from 10 or 12 to 40 villages each. In the Balapore talook there were 15 of these "turfs" or pergunnahs. Where it was feasible, the Judicial Extra Assistant Commissioners, the Police Inspectors, the Tehsildars, and the Peshkars, and the pergunnah ex-officials took each a sub-division, and thoroughly verified the returns after the numbering was completed.

10. Trial enumerations were made, and the errors resulting from them were pointed out to the numberers before the actual date fixed for the census. I was enabled to obtain from the Settlement Department the population records compiled during the survey, which came in usefully for checking our own operations. They were circulated to the talook officers, and the record for each village has been compared with the present enumeration.

11. Although some parts of the district were numbered only quite recently, and none longer back than three years by the Survey Department, there is a large apparent increase in the population. This may be accounted for by camps, travellers, workmen, and squatters; and indeed the whole floating population being naturally of less interest to that department than the agricultural classes. Further, when the survey enumeration was made, there were large bodies of workmen employed upon the railway line throughout the district, which have since left this part of the country; nevertheless the present enumeration exceeds the survey computation by 119,947 in 649,128. Where a decrease has been found in particular villages, it has been satisfactorily accounted for.

12. Nothing could have been better than the demeanour of the people, though such unusual preparations combined with the numbering taking place at night afforded ample grounds for conjectures, which the Mahomedan part of the population more or less took advantage of. In the Akote talook an uneasy feeling founded upon the assumption that all females were to be inspected and counted quickly subsided when it was contradicted and pointed out to the people that the Putwarries were the officials employed. The only other instance of credulity occurred in some villages near where my camp was pitched at the time, where an idea got abroad that the census was the precursor of a new cess or "putti" upon house-roof creepers. Some of these were removed accordingly, but an explanation of the facts removed the impression, and the "Gourds" and "Bails" were replaced or removed. At Balapore the Mahomedans objected to the number tickets being placed upon the doors through which they entered their houses, and some of them improvised small doors for the purpose. But as the appointed day drew near, all suspicion was dissipated, and the numbering was neither avoided, nor delayed, nor obstructed in any way whatever.

13. I concur with all the reports I have received in thinking that the statements herewith submitted are correct as to the actual numbers recorded. I have personally tested some of them, and the talook officers have verified at least 25 per cent.

14. With regard to castes and professions, they were very incorrectly recorded when the papers first came in from the talooks, and so late as January, I sent all the returns back for correction. In now forwarding them, I think they will be found fairly perfect, considering that this is the first census done in Berar, and that the time given for its preparation was short. To obviate such entries as "service," "juwan," "assistant," and "agent" doing duty for a distinct profession, a list of all denominations of employment and trade, and the professions branching out from them, was drawn out in this office and sent to the tehsildar. Thus, if a man called himself a servant, he had to be asked whether he served Government, the village, or a private person. If he belonged to the first, he might be either of the civil or military administration, and under each of these branches there are various sub-headings. Each tehsildar having had a list of such headings sent to him from this office, the record obtained is, it may be hoped, pretty correct.

15. At the same time the different occupations shown in Appendix C amount to the large number of 13, and might still be further reduced, for they are not all different professions by any means. Many exhibited in the miscellaneous list by the tehsildars have been more correctly placed in particular classes in this office, and still that list is too large.

16. The result of the census is to show that the population in the five talooks of the district is as follows :—

Akolah	136,078
Akote	119,621
Balapore	115,082
Mulkapore	133,723
Julgaum	84,630
TOTAL ...	649,134

17. The land and gross revenue being Rs. 26,31,611, and the district area 3,396 square miles, it follows that there is one person to Rs. 4-0-10 of revenue and 191 persons to the square mile.

18. The adult male population is	213,699
„ female „	206,757
Children, male	121,577
„ female	107,101

The whole male population is, therefore, 335,276 to 313,858 female, or as 100 : 94, which differs only one per cent. from the ratio prevailing in the Central Provinces.

19. There are 163,579 houses, or one to four persons.

20. The largest place, including suburb attached, is Akolah, where the population is 14,606; the smallest is Khorikhodawuntpore, in which there are three residents.

21. There are three towns, viz., Akolah, Akote, and Balapore, with a population above 10,000; there are nine towns, viz., Pathoor, Barse Taklee, Khamgaon, Waregaon, Sheogaon, Mulkapore, Nandoora, Julgaum, and Heewurkheir, with a population from 5,000 to 10,000; ten places, viz., Boregaon, Pinzur, Pimpulgaon Rajah, Pimpulgaon Kalay, Jamode, Sonala, Patoorda, Dyunda, Argaon, and Moondgaon, where there are between 3,000 and 5,000 residents; 17 places, viz., Oogwa, Alegaum, Khoorunkheir, Jullum, Matergaon, Deodaba, Datala, Chandoor, Wudnair Bholjee, Nimgaon, Assulgaon, Sobngaon, Bawunbheer, Wudnair Gungaee, Akolkheir, Pathurdee and Tilhara, from 1,000 to 3,000 inhabitants; and 1,395 holding under 1,000.

22. The census shows that of the whole population enumerated, there are only 228 idiots, or ·003 per cent.; 2,650 blind, or ·04 per cent.; two wholly lame; 463 partially so; 348 lepers; 98 dumb, and four deaf, which last must be erroneous.

23. Some of the children under education assist their parents in their trades, and this accounts for the small number of scholars shown in the returns. In truth, there were in the first week in November 3,002 boys at the 49 different Government schools in this district.

24. A notice of the several castes and tribes will be hereafter submitted. The statement now furnished in the appendix depicts the actual numbers in the several internal divisions of each of the eight cardinal castes. These eight grand groups contain the following :—

Brahmin	17,820
Kshatri	13,665
Vyesha	19,478
Shudra	441,793
Atishudra	88,221
Bhutuknars or "Bohemians"	15,504
Mahomedans	52,398
Miscellaneous	275
TOTAL ...	649,134

25. Of the 1,402 enumerators employed, only 142 were paid for their services, at various rates, according to the time they were working. In all, the wages given amount to Rs. 872-12-3, or an average of Rs. 6-2-4 each. Other expenses, aggregating to Rs. 601-0-5, have been incurred for oil, paper, torch-bearers, &c. The total cost of the census is, therefore, but Rs. 1,473-12-8, to which your sanction is now solicited.

From J. ALLARDYCE, ESQ., Deputy Commissioner, Mehkur District, to the Commissioner, West Berar,—No. 307, dated 19th December 1867.

2. The order directing the taking of the census reached me on the 20th September, and no time was lost in issuing instructions to the talooks as to the preliminary arrangements necessary. Copies of these instructions, which met with your approval, are appended to this report.

3. The Mehkur district being mainly an agricultural one, having in many places only very small villages, with but few inhabitants, and these entirely cultivators, it required a good deal of management on the part of tehsildars to find a sufficient number of enumerators, and to have them properly instructed, the system adopted was for the tehsildars in the first instance to sub-divide their talooks into conveniently sized blocks consisting of so many villages each, to each of these blocks or sub-divisions one head enumerator, with one or two assistants, who had been well instructed in the first instance at the tehseel station were despatched; these took so many villages of the sub-division each, and personally visited them, fixed the number of enumerators required, who were not to have upwards of 75 houses each to number (indeed 50 houses was the limit I had fixed, but in some cases a sufficient number of enumerators could not be got), pointed out how the process of enumeration was to be carried out, and how the houses were to be numbered. Considerable activity was shown in carrying out these preliminary arrangements, for in many places I visited in the Chicklee talook, I found all the houses numbered before the end of October, and the people then seemed fully to enter into the matter and understand it, and in no instance have I heard of any impediment being put in the way throughout the arrangements.

4. By the day of the census, all was in order. Every precaution was taken beforehand to see that nothing had been omitted, and the result has, I think, proved that the instructions given were thoroughly carried out.

5. To illustrate the actual working of the system, I cannot do better than forward herewith a copy of Captain Mayne's report as to how operations were conducted in the Bassim talook. The same orderly behaviour described by Captain Mayne prevailed throughout the whole district. I placed Mr. Christian, District Superintendent, in charge of the town of Mehkur, and Lieutenant Salkeld, Assistant Commissioner of the sudder station on the day of the census, both of whom reported all the arrangements as complete, and the testing after the census had been taken as perfectly correct. I was myself on the night of the census at Donegaum, a considerable town of the Mehkur talook, and I found by 7 o'clock the streets all cleared, and generally the householder sitting at his door waiting for the arrival of the enumerator. From all enquiries I have made, and from the reports received, the behaviour of the people throughout the whole district was excellent.

6. In the minds of the ignorant, previous to the census taking place, many absurd ideas prevailed, the most common of these was that the women of the house were to be brought out and examined, but this soon passed away; the general opinion was that some new taxation on the part of the "Surcar" was contemplated, and one thing connected with the operation, viz., its being taken at night, was altogether beyond comprehension. The question put being that if the "Surcar" wanted to count them, why did it not do so during the daytime, why should it be done at night?

7. The services of the police, of the schoolmasters, and of all officials of every department were made available for the occasion, and were freely made use of. The assistance of the schoolmasters in particular was of the greatest service.

From the Deputy Commissioner, Mehkur District, to the Commissioner of West Berar,— No. 11, dated 8th January 1868.

In continuation of my letter No. 307 of the 19th December 1867, forwarding the census returns of the Mehkur district, I have the honor to add a few remarks upon the population returns generally, and to mention some circumstances which seem more or less remarkable as regards the professions and castes.

2. The total population of the district is shown to be 353,436. The area of the district is computed to be 3,013 square miles, the average of population to the square mile would be, therefore, about 117; but this population is most unequally distributed over the district. All along the northern portion of the district, the country is broken up by ravines, and only here and there a village occurs, often with a very few huts; the same thing exists but to a smaller extent along the southern frontier, where the villages are small with extensive tracts of uncultivated land.

3. The proportion of the sexes is as under males 182,534, females 170,902, there being 113,024 men to 107,991 women, and 69,510 boys to 62,911 girls. The proportion of boys over girls would appear to be greater than of men over women. Captain Mayne, in sending the Bassim returns, states that the boys being generally, as a rule, much more exposed than the girls to the weather, accidents, &c., a greater mortality probably takes place amongst them. He also notices the excess of women over men in the towns, and attributes this in some measure to Mahomedans and others having several wives or mistresses, brought probably from His Highness' territories, or from villages while in the agricultural villages; the Coonbee, as a general rule, has only one wife. The difference in the numbers of men and women does not appear to me, however, to be at all remarkable, when it is considered that a number of persons from other parts of India, Hindoostan, Marwar, and elsewhere, come to the district to follow various occupations, who leave their families at their homes. The difference is only 5,000, so I should think that, excluding foreigners, the men and women are pretty evenly balanced. In the absence of any statistics as yet, it is impossible to say whether the mortality amongst boys is greater than amongst girls, but for the reasons given, this may probably be the case.

4. The population may be divided into classes as under:—

Hindoos	332,538
Mussulmans...	20,821
Europeans, Eurasians, and Native Christians	77
TOTAL ...	353,436

Of the Hindoo population, the following castes appear in the returns as below:—

Brahmins	10,545	Kolees	2,607
Coonbees	158,289	Gonds	309
Dhers	38,928	Bheels	416
Maungs	8,096	Manbaos	426
Brinjarras	11,591	Lars	1,777
Tailees	9,043	Jains	77
Aunds	7,414	Boondeelas	317
Rajpoots	3,465	Salees	1,990
Malees	14,424	Khostees	710
Dungurs	7,850	Koomars	2,376
Sonars	3,505	Marwarries	2,819
Bunniahs	4,745	Other castes	40,759
		TOTAL ...	332,538

The sects into which these castes are sub-divided are very numerous, for instance, there are 14 different sects of Brahmins, nine sects of Coonbees, 12 sects of Malees, 10 sects of Rajpoots, eight sects of Marwarries, and so on. The number of different castes is shown as 118 in all; of these, the most remarkable perhaps are the following:—Aunds—These people are in appearance like the Gonds, and are said to be an off-shoot from them; they occupy for the most part the hilly country lying betwixt the tableland of Mehkur district and the plains. They speak only Mahratta. Many villages are occupied by them entirely, and the Potels of these villages are Aunds. They are cleaner in person than Gonds, and are rather industrious; they are tolerably good cultivators; they extract honey from trees, bring firewood from the jungles, and they make good jaglias; their women wear the cholee, and the men are well dressed generally. In many things they resemble the Gonds, and in others the Coonbee. One would suppose they must have been Gonds originally, who remained in these hills when the influx of Mahrattas into the country drove the Gonds into the Sautpoorahs and country northwards, and that they gradually assumed the language and customs of the Coonbees in some things, while they retained some of the characteristics of the Gonds; they can give no account of themselves. In religion they are much the same as the Coonbee; they burn their dead, if they are not very poor; they will eat the flesh of animals, except cow's flesh, and they will eat food prepared by a Coonbee, or drink water from a Coonbee's hands, though the Coonbee will not take food or water from an Aund; they are more moderate than Gonds in their consumption of liquor; the name of Aund cannot be accounted for. In Goojrat, I am told there is a similar sect called "Nulday," who much resemble Gonds, but speak Goojrattee only; they may perhaps be the descendants of the original Gond inhabitants of Goojrat, as these may be of the Gonds who were originally in Berar.

5. The Gonds are few in number, 309, and are chiefly found in the Mehkur talook, near and amongst the hills; no description of them seems necessary, as they are evidently the same as Gonds elsewhere; they have a distinct language of their own; water they call "air," fire "kees," grass "jarce," bullock "kondah." Their dress is very scanty; they are generally cultivators and laborers, and can speak Mahratta.

6. The Kolees are said to have come originally from the Western Ghats (the Thulghat, Boreghat, and localities in that neighbourhood). They do not intermarry with any other castes, and they generally live in hilly parts of the country. Their religion is much the same as that of the Coonbee. They are much more numerous in the Chicklee talook than in the other two.

7. The Bheels are said to have come originally from the country betwixt Ahmednuggur and Kandeish. They almost always live in jungly or hilly tracts of country. Almost all the Bheels in this district are found in Chicklee talook. They are frequently entertained as village watchmen, and seem well fitted for that duty. The preponderance of both these two castes in talook Chicklee would support the inference that they have spread from the country to the west of that talook.

8. A remarkable caste is that of Lar; there are two sects of these called Dindoo, the other Shraogee, they are generally merchants or sowcars, and usually wealthy. They say they came from Goolburgah, in the Deccan, which was at one time a very important city. The first Lars who came to this district settled at Futtehkhelda, and from there they have spread all over the district. They speak Mahratta, but the two sects do not intermarry. The Dindoo sect are an approach to the Brahmin in religion; they have similar observances, but do not wear the Brahminical thread; they will drink water from a Coonbee, but will not eat food prepared by any but Brahmins; they worship Vishnoo, Mahadeo, Bowanee, Hunnooman, like Brahmins.

9. The other sect, the Shraogees, are entirely different; they worship Parusnath, and are said to be the oldest religious sect in this part of India; they are believed to be much the same as Buddhists; they will not eat or drink from any one's hand; they have their principal temple in this district at Sirpore, in Bassim talook, which is visited by Lars from a great distance; this sect would seem to be very closely allied to the Jains, and they again are supposed to be Buddhists.

10. A remarkable caste also is that of Nughat. There are only 15 in the district, and they are a sort of Brinjarry, or rather a sect of the Brinjarry caste. They beg from Brinjarrie Coonbees only, and will only eat and drink from them. They subsist entirely by begging from Brinjarry Coonbees.

11. The Boondelas are all settled at one place, viz., Futtehkhelda, where they have formed a sort of colony; they came in the first instance with troops about 150 years ago, and their families having followed them, they have not mixed with the people of the country at all. They are believed to be pure Rajpoots.

12. As regards the professions (in considering this part of the subject, the adult males only are alluded to), there are out of a whole of 113,024—

Agriculturists	59,820
Farm servants	2,895
Laborers	13,469
Domestic servants	1,564
Traders and shop-keepers, &c.... ...	5,513
Weavers, artificers, &c.	7,765
Shroffs and bankers	241
Government servants, village officers, and servants	8,453
Priests	213
Beggars	4,206
Other occupations	8,885
	113,024

There does not seem to be anything remarkable as regards the professions which I need comment upon.

From J. G. Bell, Esq., Deputy Commissioner, Oomrawuttee District, to the Commissioner of West Berar,—No. 62, dated 13th February 1868.

* * * * * * * * *

2. First.—As to the mode in which the census was taken, and the steps which were adopted to make it as correct as possible. Owing to the boundaries of the Ellichpore and Oomrawuttee districts not having been definitely settled, it was determined that the census should be made by the talooks of the old Oomrawuttee district before its sub-division, and as the tehsildars of Ellichpore and Moresee were still under my orders, the instructions, in the first instance for the census of the two districts, emanated from me; Lieutenant Szczepanski and Mr. Hordern seeing that they were carried out, and issuing any subsidiary orders that they thought necessary.

3. Each talook was divided into divisions, sub-divisions, and enumerators' charges. Towns containing more than a thousand houses and groups of 10 villages were considered divisions and placed under inspectors.

Each sub-division comprised, as a rule, 500 houses and 50 villages, and was placed in charge of a sub-inspector, while enumerators' charges consisted of 125 houses.

The inspectors were held responsible that their sub-inspectors visited the different villages, and instructed the enumerators in their work.

Tehsildars, Police Inspectors, Naib Tehsildars, Schoolmasters, literate Chief Constables were employed as Inspectors; while Chief and Head Constables, Carcoons, and Schoolmasters were the Sub-Inspectors.

Enumerators were found among Putwarries, their Gomashtas, literate Potels, and paid nominees.

Putwarries of more than one village arranged for the enumeration of not less than 125 houses in each of their villages.

4. For the last few days in October, the Assistant Commissioners and I visited each a talook, and had the inspectors and sub-inspectors thoroughly instructed, after which experimental numberings were made by the enumerators. On the 1st November, the houses in each enumerator's charge were numbered, and at the same time the first three columns of form A were filled in so far as possible, and the census was fairly commenced after dark on the night of the 7th November 1867.

5. I believe that the enumeration has been as correct as it is possible to make it. I was fortunate in having very intelligent men as inspectors and sub-inspectors both from the Police and the Educational Departments. The census of the town of Oomrawuttee, as well as of the Cantonment, was undertaken by the Superintendent of Police, assisted by Carcoons in the different offices here and by the schoolmasters and literate Policemen. Lithographed copies of the instructions for taking the census were supplied to all engaged in the work.

English forms for the Cantonments of Ellichpore and Oomrawuttee were printed and divided between them, and were filled in by house-owners and checked by enumerators; while similar forms were sent through the railway officials to be filled in by the different line inspectors living in isolated spots along the railway.

6. On the night of the 7th November, the Resident and his camp were in Oomrawuttee, and at 4 P.M., on the occasion of Sir Richard Temple visiting the town, the whole population turned out to the number of several thousands and escorted him from the cutcherry into the town.

From the brow of the hill leading to the town to one of the main gates was a sea of heads, closely packed, and yet at 9 or 10 P.M., when the Superintendent of Police went into the city to supervise his inspectors, he found the whole place as quiet as usual, the only sight being the torch-bearers accompanying the enumerators in their rounds to the several houses, and the only sound, the questions, and answers, in regard to the number of inmates in the domiciles thus visited.

7. In the same quiet way that the census was effected in the town of Oomrawuttee, was it also carried out in other towns and villages throughout the district. Not a single instance of obstruction to the enumerators has ever been brought to my notice. On the occasion of the houses being numbered and ticketed in two villages, there occurred a little disturbance. I happened to be within a mile of one, and found that the disturbance had reference to a family feud between Potels in the village rather than to numbering the houses. One disputant thought if he could bring the other into trouble by the completion of the census in the village that he would obtain the object his desire. The matter was settled in a few minutes.

Owing to the proximity of the villages on our eastern boundary to the of Nagpore, no feelings of alarm existed in the minds of the people regard to the census, though it was not to be expected that such a measure would be carried out without some of the wildest and most absurd rumours getting afloat. I believe, however, that they were never really believed, and that no alarm was ever caused by them.

One rumour I heard was that women whose breasts were too large to enter a certain cup with which enumerators were to be supplied were to be deprived of the left breast.

Another, that the English Government being in want of men for the Abyssinian War were numbering the people, with a view of taking a certain proportion for service there.

8. It will perhaps be not considered out of place if I new make some few remarks upon the statements which I have submitted in English. Statement A gives the area, land revenue, and population of each talook as it was before the Ellichpore district was formed. I have endeavoured to compute the area as correctly as possible, but if the area in square miles is compared with that in acres, reckoning 640 acres to the square mile, it will be seen that there is an error. This I am unable to correct in the absence of any revenue survey. I believe the area in square miles is nearly correct. The figures shown in the columns giving the area in acres are those borne on our rent-rolls, and they will remain as they are till the survey and settlement show us our mistakes.

9. This statement shows us that the population is 166·7 to the square mile. In the adjoining districts of Wurdah and Nagpore, it is, according to the late census held there, 141 and 172 respectively to the square mile, and hence, I think, my figures are not far out. According to our revenue papers and Putwarrie's Khanna Shoomaree, the population of these talooks was at 312,599, which is 94,677 less than the present returns give us.

The proportion of adult males to females is as 106·93 of the former to every hundred of the latter; while if reckoned on the adult and infant population, the proportion is 109·19 males to 100 females.

10. In Statements B and C you will find the castes and professions of the people. Of the total population, 7·7 per cent. are shown to be of the Mussulman race. The number of Parsees is 6, and of Christians 211.

It may, therefore, be said that 92·24 per cent. of the population is Hindoo. The total number of the Hindoo population is 375,682. Of these, 3·1 per cent. are Brahmins, and represent priestcraft; 2·3 per cent. are Kschatris, which form the soldier and writer class; 1·9 per cent. are Vyesheas, representing merchants and traders; 59·9 per cent. are Shudras, which class includes the cultivating population of the district; 3·9 per cent. are Punchals, representing the artizan class; 1·5 per cent. are Lingayets, which ought, I think, to have been included among the Vyeshas, being traders and shop-keepers. All not included in the above divisions of castes, except the hilly and low castes, have been classed as mixed and miscellaneous castes, the percentage of these on the whole Hindoo population is 6·51, while of the hilly castes it is 3·6, and of the low castes 16·7.

11. In the Statement C showing professions, the only female adults which have been included are prostitutes. With this exception, the statement gives the professions of male adults only.

The total of these is 140,767. Looking, therefore, at the whole population, male and female, adult and infant, the domestic class, including women and children, is 65·49 per cent. of the whole, giving a percentage of 34·51 of the population as engaged in agricultural, commercial, or other pursuits. In other words one adult male has 2·9, or nearly three souls dependent on him for the means of living.

The percentage of the agricultural class on the adult male population is 58·04, of the commercial, 2·03, and of the industrial, 39·93.

From J. T. Bushby, Esq., Deputy Commissioner, Woon District, to the Commissioner, West Berar,—No. 49-7, dated — January 1868.

On the — December 1867, I had the honor of forwarding to your office the vernacular census returns of the Woon district, together with the English abstracts, prepared according; to the forms prescribed; I beg now to furnish particulars as to the manner in which the census was taken.

2. The Woon district contains 5,510 square miles of country, interspersed with hills, some of considerable height and extent, and a very large proportion of jungle. It is divided into four talooks :—

Woon with an area of square miles			...	1,690
Poosud	"	"	...	1,240
Darwa	"	"	...	1,560
Yeotmal	"	"	...	1,020

3. There are in Woon talook eight pergunnahs, with 559* villages; in Poosud 8 pergunnahs, containing 353 villages; Darwa 12 pergunnahs, 419 villages; and Yeotmal, 18 pergunnahs with 303 villages; total 1,634 villages.

* 480 Mouzas.
79 Muzras.

4. Immediately on receipt of orders directing a census to be taken, instructions were issued to tehsildars desiring them to prepare lists of the most intelligent people in their talooks, in view to the appointment of enumerators.

5. The officials in Government employ (civil, police, and schoolmasters) were also enlisted for the work, and the whole staff drilled. The inspectors, sub-inspectors, and enumerators were instructed by the tehsildars, whose work was supervised, as much as distances would render possible by Messrs. Davies, Cumberlege, and myself.

6. The talooks of Woon and Yeotmal were placed under Mr. Davies' control. I undertook the management of Darwa and Poosud.

7. The different talooks were divided into ranges. In Woon there was a staff of 8 inspectors, 27 sub-inspectors, and 335 enumerators. In Poosud 5 inspectors, 19 sub-inspectors, and 269 enumerators. In Darwa 4 inspectors, 15 sub-inspectors, and 263 enumerators; and in Yeotmal 8 inspectors, 14 sub-inspectors, 166 enumerators, making a total of 25 inspectors, 75 sub-inspectors, and 1,033 enumerators. Each inspector had to supervise on an average the work of 3 sub-inspectors and 41 enumerators. The sub-inspectors on the average the work of 13 enumerators, who in their turn had each one and a half villages to number, consisting of 96 houses and 432 souls.

8. The paid agency consisted of 136 men. The cost to the State was Rs. 925-1, inclusive of oil, stationery, and batta to Government servants, or on an average annas 9-1 per village.

9. The population will be per square mile of country 86·6 individuals, or 1 to every 7·4 acres of country.

10. In the lists forwarded, there will be found the large number of 1,677 blind and 262 lepers. The people attribute the blindness to small-pox, and leprosy to having to drink water which becomes impregnated with vegetable decayed matter engendered in its flow from the hills, covered as they for the most part are with scrub jungle.

11. I regret to state that the professions and callings of women have not been entered in the census returns. The orders were not received in time to admit of this being done in this district.

12. The general behaviour of the people was quiet, and no disturbance of any kind happened. Some foolish rumours were spread by the ignorant as to the census for enumerating the population, but by personal communication, they were convinced that the measure was harmless, and that neither their persons, castes, religious belief, or personal characteristics would be in any way interfered with.

13. The enumerators were warned that any proved cases of oppression would be visited with prompt punishment, and the people were counselled to bring any dereliction of duty of the Registrars to notice.

14. I was present with the enumerators at Yeotmal, and personally superintended the registry of many of the houses. The people gave the information required gladly and without reserve. No difficulties were experienced, and information was quickly and correctly entered by the enumerators. Below will be found an account of the peculiarities of the Bunjarrah tribe, numbering in this district 36,948; a further description will be recorded in the Gazetteer in the district.

* * * * *

From the Officiating Deputy Commissioner, Ellichpore District, to the Officiating Commissioner, West Berar,—No. 26, dated 11th January 1868.

I have the honor to forward herewith an abstract statement of the census taken in the Ellichpore district on the night of the 7th November last.

2. This report will only relate to the Mailghat and the Ellichpore and Moresee talooks as they stood before the boundaries of the present district were determined on.

3. Lieutenant Mackenzie had the entire control of the census in the Mailghat, and has furnished me with a very full report, which I think I cannot do better than attach. For although I shall include the Mailghat returns in my general district figures, still as that talook differs so widely from the other two in every respect, I shall endeavour to keep them as much separate as possible, and let Lieutenant Mackenzie's report speak for itself as to the details connected with Mailghat.

4. In the two talooks under report, there are in all 592 towns and villages. The census staff consisted of 27 inspectors, 72 sub-inspectors, and 521 enumerators. Each inspector's charge was about 1,000 houses, each sub-in or's 500, and each enumerator's about 125.

5. In the Ellichpore Cantonment, Commanding Officers were good enough to undertake the numbering in their respective lines.

6. The census staff was made up as follows:—

Inspectors.

Government servants ...	8	Zemindars	7
Schoolmasters	5
Police Officers	7		27

Sub-Inspectors.

Government servants ...	13	Police Officers ...	3
Zemindars	32	Putwarries	3
Schoolmasters ...	6
Potels	15		72

Enumerators.

Government servants ...	31	Paid agency ...	52
Schoolmasters ...	2	Zemindars	3
Potels	41
Putwarries	292		521
Gomastahs	100

7. As soon as the staff was determined on, an abstract of the rules concerning the census was distributed to the inpectors and sub-inspectors. T enumerators were assembled at the head quarters of the talooks, and the ject and forms of the census were explained to them.

8. Forms were then distributed, and the staff despatched to their resp tive charges.

9. I then ascertained that there might be some difficulty in numbering th Mahomedan inhabitants of the city, as they did not approve of strangers prying into their domestic arrangements, and so I determined to give separate forms for each house to the better class to be filled in by the owners themselves; this met all objections and was found to answer admirably.

10. The orders issued were that on the 1st November, the enumerators were to commence to number the houses, and to fill in the first three columns of Form A. At sun-set on the 7th, the numbering of the inhabitants was to commence. Besides the numbering by the enumerators, the inspectors were to number in 10 to 15 per cent. of the houses, and the sub-inspectors from 15 to 30 per cent., and the returns thus obtained were then to be compared by way of testing their correctness.

11. Mr. Hordern moved about the Ellichpore talook, whilst I did the same in Moresee. Every opportunity was taken of explaining to the villagers the object of the census, and of seeing that the enumerators perfectly understood what they had to do, settling any doubts if they had any.

12. As a general rule, I found that the instructions which had been issued were understood, and that no difficulty in taking the census was anticipated.

13. The people did not like numbers being fixed on their houses; they thought that this must mean either a house tax, or that the object of the census was to impose a poll tax.

14. I took pains, however, to explain that once the census was over, they might do what they liked with the numbers. I was therefore sorry the other day to see a proposal to retain those numbers for postal purposes. Not that the people would object to their houses being re-numbered for this express purpose, but retaining the old numbers (they being in series of one to 125, therefore not adapted for the purpose stated) tended, in my opinion, to awake old doubts which had only been quieted after considerable trouble.

15. Once the object of the numbers on the houses was understood, the people took most extraordinary care to protect them; they thought that persons bearing them ill-will would remove or alter them in order to get the owners into trouble, and it was therefore a common practice, for some nights before the 7th, for men to sit up and watch their houses all night.

16. On the night of the 7th, the enumerators and torch-bearers quietly moved from house to house, the remaining columns of Form A were filled in, and the census was taken without the slightest difficulty or disturbance of any kind. As a rule, the numbering and testing was completed by 2 A. M.

17. As yet, there has been no regular survey of these talooks, but according to the yearly settlement or Putwarrie's papers, the area and population are shown as follow :—

Uncultivated.		Cultivated.		Population.
Square miles.	Acres.	Square miles.	Acres.
877⅓	561,478	836¼	535,130	240,202

18. As far as the detail of cultivation goes, this return is entirely wrong, a great portion of the land shown as uncultivated is now cultivated, although not acknowledged as such by the holders. Against many villages thousands of acres are recorded as "waste," which cannot be pointed out, as they do not exist. This state of things cannot be set right until the regular settlement is made.

19. By the census taken on the 7th, the actual population is as follows :—

Male		Female
Adults.	Children.	Adults.	Children.
102,000	54,200	100,309	47,444

Total males	156,200
„ females	147,753
Total Population	303,953

Or 63,751 more than are shown in the Putwarrie's returns; whether this is the result of increase of population, or inaccurate numbering in the first place, I cannot say, but should think a little of both.

20. The returns now submitted are five in number—

1.—The enumerators' returns marked A.

2.—Compilation of the above marked B.

3.—Return of castes marked C.

4.—Return of trades and callings marked D, and following Lieutenant Mackenzie's example, I add a return marked E, showing in a condensed form the information regarding area, land revenue, population, &c.

21. The information regarding the amount of cultivated and uncultivated land being, as I before said, not to be depended on, I think it unnecessary to compare it with the population, or indeed to remark further upon it.

22. The area of the two talooks is 1,713½ square miles, or 1,096,608 acres, giving 177·4 persons to the square mile, and 3 acres 18 goontees* to each person, or for the whole district 102·4 persons to the mile, and six acres seven goontees to each person.

23. The land revenue of the two talooks is Rs. 7,38,197-4, giving an average rate of 10 annas 8 pie per acre, or for the whole district 5 annas 7 pie per acre.

24. In the two talooks, there are 514 inhabited towns and villages, the average number of inhabitants to each is 591·3, or for the whole district 410·9.

25. The number of houses in the 514 villages is 66,333, or an average of 129·05 to each village; for the whole district 88 to each village.

26. The average number of persons in the 66,333 houses is 4·5, and for the whole district 4·6.

27. The proportion of total males to females in the two talooks is 51·4 to 48·6, or very much the same as in the Mailghat, and the average continues very similar between adult males and females and between male and female children.

In a hundred.

28. In Berar, male children are slightly preferred to female ones, because the latter marry and leave their parent's house so young that they are looked upon as only on a temporary stay; this, however, does not, I believe, affect the way in which they are treated. As a rule children of both sexes are about equally neglected. The custom is to give them opium from the time they are fifteen days old until they are about five years; by this means, staying their appetites, and giving their parents liberty to pursue their daily labor without care.

29. Form C gives in detail the particulars of the different castes. The population is divided as follows:—

Europeans and Native Christians	257
Mahomedans	29,472
Hindoos	274,224
	303,953

The Hindoos may be sub-divided as follows:—

Brahmins (four sects)	6,784
Kschatries (11 sects)	4,782
Wyshie (28 sects, including eight sects of Marwarries, amounting to 2,730)	6,056
Coonbees (Shudra), 14 sects	82,555
Malees	46,842
Mahars	30,267
Gonds	13,870

Other castes, including

Mangs...	83,068
Chambars
Bhoees...
Dhungurs
Hujjams
Koombars
Sootars
Sonars
Wuddars
	274,224

These figures only relate to the Ellichpore and Moresee talooks.

* * * * *

* 16 annas make 1 goontee, 30 goontees make 1 acre.

From K. I. L. MACKENZIE, ESQ., Assistant Commissioner, in charge Mailghat, to the Deputy Commissioner, Ellichpore,—No. 568, dated 28th November 1867.

I have the honor to forward to you the returns of the census taken in the talook of Mailghat, Ellichpore district, East Berar division, on the night intervening between the 7th and 8th November last.

Arrangements for the census.

2. On receipt of the orders for the taking of the census received by me on the 24th September, I at once made the following arrangements, apportioning the villages in such numbers that there should be no difficulty in completing their enumeration in one night.

* * * * *

Total of sub-inspectors and enumerators 82; of these, 2 sub-inspectors only had no villages assigned them, and therefore the actual number engaged in enumerating was 80, giving an average of something over four villages to each. With comparison elsewhere, the number so employed may appear large; but considering the wild and broken character of the country, and that the villages are much scattered, I naturally required a greater number for the work, and my object being to ensure success, I employed what I thought was requisite to that end. The number, however, will not, I think, be thought excessive when I mention that as the area of the talook (as computed by the survey) is 1,649 square miles, there is the average of but one inhabited village in every 5·08 square miles. All the sub-inspectors and save ten all the enumerators (these ten being men who last year had been employed in the census in Baitool) were collected by me personally at Chickuldah, the forms explained to them, and a trial census taken at their hands of some of the near villages, to see that they understood their work, and they were finally despatched to their respective charges, supplied with all necessaries, forms pens, ink, paper, and oil for "mushals."

* * * * *

Directions given them.

The directions given were that, prevs to the day of the census, enumerators should visit different villages entrusted to them, number and ticket the houses, and fill up the non-variable items (such as number of houses, overseers' names, castes, and callings in the fullest detail) of information in form A. Their work to be supervised, and if necessary corrected by the sub-inspectors. At the close of the census, each enumerator in each village return to give an abstract of the trades and castes, in addition to the total of the population.

While I personally took advantage of every opportunity offered me to explain to the heads of villages and others what the object of the census really was, I impressed on the sub-inspectors the necessity of removing any vague and groundless alarms that may have taken hold of the minds of the people.

Effect on the people and the rumours amongst them.

3. By the 24th October the necessary arrangements being all completed, and every precaution taken to ensure success, myself moved about between the 1st and 4th November (when I proceeded to meet the Resident at Ellichpore) to see how the orders were being carried out. In those villages that came under my observation, everything seemed to be going on all right. The people generally appeared not to be in any way alarmed; indeed many of them knew all about the census taken last year in the adjoining district of the Central Provinces. Their minds were thus prepared, but I believe the Gonds had it amongst themselves that the Government wanted to impress soldiers for a foreign war in which they were engaged, and that the object of the census was to ascertain the number obtainable for such service.

Night of the census.

4. On the night of the 7th November, I myself was at Chickuldah, and by a little after midnight, the returns of the adjacent villages were completed and brought in. In most parts elsewhere it was near morning, however, before the enumerators completed their work. On all the returns being received, which they were by the 18th November, they were carefully scrutinized, and a large proportion checked; odd villages here and there being chosen for the purpose. I have no reason to believe that they are otherwise than reliable.

I may mention here that late on the 4th November, owing to the supposed impracticability of night work in Mailghat, orders came permitting a day census; but as every arrangement had already been completed for a night census, and as for obvious reasons the latter only could be a reliable one, I thought it better at the last moment not to confuse the sub-inspectors and enumerators by issuing any fresh orders that might not reach some parts of the talook in time, and even if they did be perhaps imperfectly understood and acted on, I therefore let matters stand as previously arranged.

Previous statistics.

5. Mr. Mulheran, when doing the Topographical Survey of the talook in 1860-61, returned as follows:—

Cultivated Land.		Uncultivated Land.		Population.
Square Miles.	Acres.	Square Miles.	Acres.	Male.	Female.	Infant, both sexes.	Total.
151	96,640	1,498	958,720	7,607	7,298	8,212	23,117

Of which 22,651 were said to be Hindoos (including Gonds, Koorkoos, Gowlies, Mhals, &c.), and the 466 balance Mahomedan; while the Putwarrie returns altogether unreliable as to cultivated and uncultivated land gives the "Khana Shoomarie" or house census at—

Population.

Male.	Female.	Infant, both sexes.	Total.
6,979	5,917	2,807	15,693

The result of the census shows, supposing Mr. Mulheran's (the latest) return to be correct, that our rule has done much to attract settlers, since the population in six years has nearly doubled.

Census statistics.

6. The returns now obtained and submitted are five in number, viz.:—

1st.—The enumerators' return in form A of each village consecutively numbered.

2nd.—Form B being the compilation of the above by villages in the order numbered for the whole talook.

3rd.—An abstract from the enumerators' return of the castes in the talook marked C.

4th.—An abstract of the trades and callings marked D. For easier reference, I submit returns C and D in English as well as Mahratta.

5th.—Return marked E (in English only) condensed information regarding the talook as to area, land revenue, population, number of villages, houses, &c.

Density of the population.

7. The whole area of the talook in square miles is 1,619.

Cultivated acreage 96,640 = 151 square miles. } According to Mr. Mulheran.
Uncultivated " 958,720 = 1,498 " }
The land revenue is ... Rs. 17,309

I would here remark, however, that when in 1860-61 Mr. Mulheran arrived at the above calculation of cultivated and uncultivated land, the revenue was Rs. 6,000, or thereabouts, and as the proportion of cultivated area has undoubtedly increased, though how much cannot be exactly told, yet since the rate has not altered, and is on plough bullocks, it would be allowable to assume that it has increased somewhat in the same proportion as the revenue. Yet strictly adhering to ascertained facts, and taking Mr. Mulheran's return of 96,640 acres, equal to 151 square miles, as the cultivated area, while the uncultivated area, chiefly forest, is returned at 958,720 acres, equal to 1,498 square miles, we get (the total population by census being 40,405) on the whole area (1,649 square miles) 24·5 persons to the square mile. On the cultivated area (151 square miles) 267·5 persons to the square mile, or 1 person to every 2 acres, 0 roods, 6 poles cultivated. On the whole area this is a very sparse population indeed, and according to the returns lately published is about equal to that of the Upper Godavery districts of the Central Provinces.

Incidence of the revenue on cultivated acreage.

On total acreage.

8. Assuming the above area to be nearly correct, we find that for each cultivated acre annas 2-10 only is paid; while on the whole acreage cultivated and uncultivated, the revenue is only pies $3\frac{1}{7}$ per acre.

Towns and villages.

9. In the whole talook there are 324 inhabited villages, the average number of inhabitants therefore to each is 124·70. If a place having over 1,000 inhabitants constitutes a town, there are none such in Mailghat. The total number of houses is returned at 7,411; hence the average to each village is 22·8, and the average number of souls that each house contains is 5·4.

Proportion of the sexes.

10. The total males, both adult and infants, are to the females—

as 20,950 to 19,455
or 100 to 92·8

that is in every 100 of the population, there are 51·8 males to 48·2 females.

The male adults are to the female—

as 12,550 to 11,467
or 100 to 92·8

that is out of every 100 of the adults, there are 51·8 males to 48·2 females.

The male infants under 13 years are to the female of the same age—that is out of every 100 of the infants, there are 51·8 males to 48·2 females.

as 8,600 to 7,988

It is extraordinary to see the proportion the same throughout. Doubtless amongst a population, four-fifths of whom belong to the so-called aboriginal and hill races, ignorance must have led to the now exact recognition of the limit fixed (13 years) between adults and infants. But taking the returns as given, they show that among infants the males preponderate, and since the same proportion exists between the adult sexes, it follows that more deaths occur amongst the males, or in other words that female life is slightly better preserved.

11. Return No. C gives the numbers of each caste in detail, 84 in all; but grouping them under eight great divisions, we find that on the census night there were in Mailghat—

			Return C. Col.
1.	Europeans	4	.. 82
2.	Eurasian	1	... 83
3.	Native Christians	13	... 84
4.	Hindoos	5,196	... 1 to 52
5.	Mixed Hindoo and Mahomedan ...	22	... 62 „ 63
6	Mahomedans	469	... 64 „ 73
7.	Gonds, Koorkoos, and aborigines ..	33,817	... 53 „ 61
8.	Out-castes	883	... 74 „ 81
	TOTAL ...	40,405

Amongst the Hindoos, the Gowlies numbering ...	...	1,464
Gowlans numbering	...	1,289
Rajpoots „	...	403
And Brinjarahs „	...	453
Together	...	3,609

are the castes most considerable in numbers.

Of those shown as mixed Hindoo and Mahomedan (Dhobies and Eunuchs), it would perhaps be safe to class half as Hindoo and half as Mahomedan, but even adding these to those who are shown as distinctly of the latter creed, their number is inconsiderable. It is worthy of note that of the Mahomedan sects, Moguls only are unrepresented.

The remarks in the Return C sufficiently explain who the out-castes are.

We now come to the so-called aborigines and hill tribes who greatly preponderate, being somewhat over four-fifths of the whole.

They are sub-divided as follows:—

Koorkoos	27,469
The Mhal, the Koorkoo out-castes ...	2,539
Total Koorkoos ...	30,008
Gond, Raj Gonds	2,079
Oogurmoondey Gonds	6	signify those whose turban does not cover the top of the head.
Moogeys	332	fishermen and quail catchers.
Bhoyah Gonds	63
Purdhans	131	Gond Bhats.
Bullais	455	Gond Dher or out-castes.
Total Gonds ...	3,084
Bheels ...	725

Great interest attaches to these so-called aboriginal races, the Koorkoo, the Gond, and the Mhal, who each possess a distinct but unwritten language. Investigation given to the Koorkoo and the Gondie allies, the former with the Kins or Kols, and certain other tribes at the foot of the Himalayas in the north-east, the Karens in Burmah, and the Benwahs in Malacca, while the language of the latter is shown to have affinity with Tamil and Teloogoo. The Mhal tongue has not been enquired into as yet, but local tradition affirms that race to be the oldest of the three here, though at some unknown period they succumbed to and now hold the menial position of the Koorkoodher.

12. Return D. shows the number of professions in the talook, which are given as 51; of these the agricultural classes are 36,171 in numbers as below:—

Professions.

Landholders ...	706	Farm servants ...	609
Agriculturists ...	24,007	Labourers	8,457

Herdsmen and gowlies ... 2,392

Servants (of whom 1,080 are house and 417 village) are ...	1,497	Workers in metal ...	269
Spirit-sellers	543	viz., Iron smiths	242
		Gold „	12
		Copper „	9

Supplier of the necessaries of life, such as grain, vegetables, groceries, fish, meat, &c., 228; amongst these the most numerous are—

Fishmongers	93
Tobacconists	49,	and lastly
Grain-sellers	43

In the cloth trade there are 73 only—

Weavers	21
Dyers	30
Cloth-sellers	22

In the remaining miscellaneous professions, 28 in number, there are 1,624 chiefly made up of the undermentioned :—

Beggars	391
Carriers	261
General traders	216
Government employés	198
Shoe-makers	109
Oil-sellers	99;

while the rest varying from about 50 in each, and downwards have amongst them—

Bankers	4	and money changers	8

The returns would seem to indicate that about nine-tenths of the population is agricultural, but it is probable that a large proportion of the Koorkoos and Gonds live as much by carrying out wood for sale as by actually cultivating land, though perhaps having a small holding, they return themselves as agriculturists.

Small as is the proportion of the trading and artizan classes, it is lamentable to see in comparison with them the Kullals or spirit-sellers bearing so high a proportion.

COORG COURTS BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. TAYLOR moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define the jurisdiction of the Courts in Coorg be taken into consideration. He said that since the Bill was introduced he had had the advantage of consulting the present local authorities on its provisions, and the Committee had adopted several useful suggestions made by the Officiating Judicial Commissioner, in which the Commissioner also had expressed his concurrence. In the Bill, as introduced, certain sections were inserted, providing for the criminal powers to be exercised by the several grades of Courts, and that their proceedings generally should be regulated by the Code of Criminal Procedure. On the understanding that this Code, which was already de facto in force in Coorg, was about to be formally extended to the Province by an executive order, the Committee considered that the sections referred to, namely, 21, 22, 26 and 28, were unnecessary, and had accordingly struck them out of the Bill. Since coming to the Council, however, certain papers had been placed in his (Mr. TAYLOR's) hands which showed that the non-extension of the Criminal Procedure Code to the Province of Coorg, in the Notification of 1862, which extended its provisions to the territory of Mysore, was an accidental omission; that its extension to Coorg was, indeed, approved by the Government of India though the sanction was not communicated to the Commissioner, and that the local officers had for the last six years exercised the powers conferred by the Code. Under these circumstances, it seemed desirable to add a section to the present Bill, the adoption of which would be presently moved by Mr. Maine, which would meet the object as effectually as the usual Notification in the Gazette, and would have the additional advantage of legalizing the proceedings of the officers of Government for past years.

The Committee had also struck out the clause in Section 4 requiring the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council to the investment of Párbatiyagár and Náib Súbahdárs, officers who resembled Tahsíldárs in this part of India, with power to try suits of a small amount. This would save delay and correspondence.

Section 24 of the Bill as introduced, specially provided for the exercise in Coorg of sessional jurisdiction by the Superintendent of the Ashtagram Division in the Province of Mysore. The Officiating Judicial Commissioner remarked, and the Commissioner of Coorg agreed with him, that this provision was objectionable as amounting in point of fact to a recognition as a permanent arrangement of the accidental connection now subsisting between Mysore and Coorg. The Committee had, therefore, substituted a clause empowering the Governor General in Council to appoint any subject of the Queen to be Sessions Judge of Coorg, declaring that such Judge should, as often as might be necessary, hold sessions within that Province, and providing that he and the Judicial Commissioner respectively might hear appeals beyond its limits.

There was no other material alteration or amendment in the Bill to which he need call the attention of the Council.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE moved that the following section be added to the Bill:—

"25. The Code of Criminal Procedure shall extend to the said Province, and shall be deemed to have been in force therein from the ninth day of December 1862."

And that Section 1 be altered thus,—

"1. This Act may be called "The Coorg Courts Act."

"Section 25 shall take effect at once, and the rest of this Act shall come into operation on the first day of December 1868."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. TAYLOR then moved that the Bill as amended be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

LOCK-HOSPITALS BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to enable Municipalities to provide for Lock-Hospitals.

PANJAB TENANCY BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law relating to the tenancy of land in the Panjáb.

The Council then adjourned to the 15th October 1868.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 1st October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

Act No. XXIV of 1868.

An Act to prohibit the practice of inoculation in Kumaon and Garhwál.

Preamble.

Whereas it is expedient to prohibit the practice of inoculation with the small-pox in the Districts of Kumaon and Garhwál, it is hereby enacted as follows:—

Penalty for inoculating.

1. Whoever produces or attempts to produce in any person by inoculation with variolous matter, or by wilful exposure to variolous matter, or to any thing impregnated therewith, or who wilfully by any other means produces the disease of small-pox in any person, shall be liable, on conviction before a Magistrate, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, or to both.

Penalty on inoculated person entering place to which Act extends.

2. If any person having been inoculated with the small-pox in a place to which this Act does not extend, shall afterwards enter any place to which this Act extends, before the date of forty days from the date of such inoculation, or without a certificate from a qualified Medical Officer that such person is no longer likely to cause contagion, such person shall be liable, on conviction before a Magistrate, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, or to both.

Reward to informer.

3. Whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine under this Act, the convicting Magistrate may award any portion not exceeding one-half of such fine to the person on whose information the offender has been convicted.

Extent of Act.

4. This Act extends only to the Districts of Kumaon and Garhwál.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 8th October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

Act No. XXV of 1868.

An Act to define the jurisdiction of the Courts in Coorg.

Preamble.

Whereas it is expedient to define the jurisdiction of the Civil and Criminal Courts in the Province of Coorg; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called "The Coorg Courts' Act."

Commencement of Act.

Section 25 shall take effect at once and the rest of this Act shall come into operation on the first day of December 1868.

Grades of Courts in Coorg.

2. There shall be six grades of Civil Courts in the province of Coorg, which shall be in addition to any Courts of Small Causes and to any other Courts established under any Act hereafter passed by the Governor General of India in Council (that is to say),—

(1.) The Court of the Súbahdár of the second class:

(2.) The Court of the Súbahdár of the first class:

(3.) The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the second class:

(4.) The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the first class:

(5.) The Court of the Superintendent; and

(6.) The Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

The Criminal Courts in the said Province shall be those referred to in the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Civil Jurisdiction.

Power to declare grades of Súbahdárs and Assistant Superintendents.

3. Subject to any orders that may from time to time be issued by the Governor General of India in Council, the Commissioner of Coorg shall have power to declare to which of the said grades any Súbahdár and any Assistant Superintendent shall belong.

Power to invest Párbatiyagárs and Naib Súbahdárs with jurisdiction up to Rupees fifty.

4. The Commissioner may invest any Párbatiyagár and any Náib Súbahdár with power to try and determine suits for money due whether on bond or other contract or for rent, or for moveable property, or for the value of such property, or for damages, when the debt, damage, or demand does not exceed in amount or value the sum of Rupees fifty, and to prescribe the local limits within which the Párbatiyagár or Naib Súbahdár so invested shall exercise such power.

Jurisdiction of Súbahdár of second class.

5. The Court of the Súbahdár of the second class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees one hundred in value or amount.

Jurisdiction of Súbahdár of first class.

6. The Court of the Súbahdár of the first class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees three hundred in value or amount.

Jurisdiction of Assistant Superintendent of second class.

7. The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the second class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees one thousand in value or amount, and, subject to the provisions and limitations hereinafter prescribed, to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions in suits, and (where an appeal is allowed by the rules of procedure) from the orders of the Courts of the Súbahdárs of the first and second classes respectively, and of Párbatiyagárs or Náib Súbahdárs invested as aforesaid.

Jurisdiction of Assistant Superintendent of first class.

8. The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the first class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees three thousand in value or amount, and, subject to the provisions and limitations hereinafter prescribed, to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions in suits, and (where an appeal is allowed by the rules of procedure for the time being in force in Coorg) from the orders of the Courts of the Súbahdárs of the first and second classes respectively, and of Párbatiyagárs or Náib Súbahdárs invested as aforesaid.

Jurisdiction of Superintendent.

9. The Court of the Superintendent shall have power to try and determine suits of every description and of any amount, and to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions in suits and (where an appeal is allowed by the said rules of procedure) from the orders of the Courts of Súbahdárs and Assistant Superintendent of both classes respectively, and of Párbatiyagárs or Náib Súbahdárs invested as aforesaid.

10. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner shall have power to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions of the Superintendent in suits, and (where an appeal is allowed by the said rules of procedure) from the orders of the Superintendent, and also special appeals from the decisions passed by the Superintendent or by an Assistant Superintendent of either grade on regular appeal:

Provided that such special appeals shall lie on the ground of the decision being contrary to some law or usage having the force of law, or of a substantial error or defect in law in the procedure or investigation of the case, which may have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits, and on no other grounds:

Provided also that no special appeal shall lie from any decision or order passed on regular appeal after the passing of this Act, in any suit of the nature cognizable in a Court of Small Causes under Act No. XI of 1865, section six, when the debt, damage or demand for which the original suit is instituted does not exceed three hundred rupees; but every such order or decision shall be final.

Time for presenting appeals.

11. The memorandum of appeal prepared in the form and containing the particulars mentioned in the Code of Civil Procedure shall be presented in the Court empowered to hear an appeal within the period hereinafter specified, unless the appellant shows sufficient cause to the satisfaction of such Court for not having presented the memorandum of appeal within such period, that is to say, thirty days if the appeal lie to the Assistant Superintendents or Superintendent, and ninety days if the appeal lie to the Judicial Commissioner.

The said period shall be reckoned from and exclusive of the day on which the decision or order appealed against was passed, and also exclusive of such time as may be requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree or order from which the appeal is made.

Special appeals shall be presented in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner within the period hereinbefore fixed for appeals.

Extraordinary original jurisdiction of Judicial Commissioner.

12. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner shall have power to remove and to try and determine as a Court of extraordinary original jurisdiction, any suit within the jurisdiction of any Court in the said province when he thinks proper to do so, either on the agreement of the parties to that effect, or for purposes of justice, the reasons for so doing being recorded on the proceedings of his Court.

Judicial Commissioner to superintend and to frame rules of practice for subordinate Courts.

13. The Judicial Commissioner shall have superintendence over all Courts in the said province, and shall have power to call for returns and to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of such Courts, and also to prescribe forms for every proceeding in the said Courts for which he thinks necessary that a form be provided, and also for keeping all books, entries and accounts to be kept by the officers, and also settle tables of fees to be allowed to the attorneys, vakeels, and all clerks and officers of such Courts, and from time to time to alter any such rule, form or table.

The rules, forms, and tables so made, framed and settled, shall be used and observed in the said Courts: Provided that such rules, forms and tables be not inconsistent with the provisions of any law in force for the time being, and shall before they are issued have received the sanction of the Commissioner.

Governor General in Council may confer powers of Superintendent or Assistant Superintendent.

14. Whenever the state of the public business requires it, the Governor General of India in Council may invest any person with the powers of a Superintendent or Assistant Superintendent in any part of the province of Coorg.

Court in which suit shall be instituted.

15. Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it: Provided that no suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes which may hereafter be established, shall be heard and determined in any other Court having any jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court of Small Causes.

Appeal to lie from all decisions, except when expressly prohibited.

16. Except when otherwise provided in any law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from the decisions of the Courts of original jurisdiction to the Courts authorized by this Act to hear appeals from the decisions of those Courts.

Distribution of business among subordinate Courts.

17. The Superintendent may direct the business in the Courts subordinate to him whether or not they have their sittings in the same place, to be distributed among such Courts in such way as he thinks fit: Provided that no Court shall try any suit in which the amount or value of the claim shall exceed its proper jurisdiction.

Local limits within which Appellate Courts shall exercise appellate jurisdiction.

18. The Superintendent shall from time to time, with the concurrence and approval of the Commissioner, prescribe to each of the Appellate Courts subordinate to him such local limits within which they shall respectively exercise their appellate jurisdiction.

Transfer of suits from subordinate Court to that of the Superintendent or Assistant.

19. The Superintendent may, on the petition of either party, or in the absence of such petition, withdraw any suit instituted in any Court subordinate to him, and try such suit himself or refer it for trial to any other such subordinate Court, and competent in respect of the value or amount of the suit to try the same.

The Superintendent may also withdraw any appeal instituted in the Court of any Assistant Superintendent subordinate to him, and try the appeal himself or refer it for trial to the Court of any other Assistant Superintendent in his province.

Transfer of suits from one subordinate Court to another.

20. The Judicial Commissioner may order that the cognizance of any suit or appeal instituted in any Court subordinate to his Court, not being a Court of Small Causes, shall be transferred to his own Court or to any other such subordinate Court competent in respect of the value or amount of the subject matter of the suit or appeal to try the same.

Criminal Jurisdiction.

Superintendent to be Chief Officer charged with executive administration of District in criminal matter.

21. For purposes of criminal jurisdiction, the Superintendent of Coorg shall be taken to be the Chief Officer charged with the executive administration of a District in criminal matters.

Power to appoint Session Judge of Coorg.

22. The Governor General of India in Council may from time to time appoint any subject of Her Majesty to be Session Judge of Coorg, and may also from time to time suspend or remove any person so appointed.

The Session Judge shall, as often as may be necessary for the trial of offenders, hold sessions in the said Province. Provided that he and the Judicial Commissioner respectively may hear and determine appeals beyond the limits of the same Province.

Appeals from sentences of Superintendent and other Officers vested with full powers.

23. Appeals from sentences and orders passed by the Superintendent or by any officer subordinate to him exercising full powers of a Magistrate, from which an appeal is allowed under the Code of Criminal Procedure, shall lie to the Judicial Commissioner, and shall be heard and determined by him:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prevent the Judicial Commissioner from exercising under the said Code all or any of the powers of the High Court vested in him.

Confirmation of sentences passed by Superintendent of Ashtagram.

24. All sentences and orders heretofore passed by the Superintendent of Ashtagram in his capacity of Session Judge of Coorg shall be deemed to be as valid as if this Act had then been passed, and he had been appointed, under section 22, Session Judge of Coorg.

Extension of Code of Criminal Procedure.

25. The Code of Criminal Procedure shall extend to the said Province, and shall be deemed to have been in force therein from the ninth day of December 1862.

No. 1798.

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council has much pleasure in publishing for general information a proclamation issued by the Maharajah of Jeypore, in which His Highness announces that he has removed all restrictions on the traffic of grain in his territory, and has abandoned the collection of every description of tax on grain.

His Excellency in Council trusts that the enlightened and humane example set by the Maharajah of Jeypore may be followed by other Chiefs throughout India.

Proclamation

By His Highness Suramudai Rajahaye Hindoostan Raj Rajender Sree Maharajahdheeraj Sewaee Ram Singh Bahadoor, G.C.S.I., dated the 24th September 1868.

There has been a failure of crops throughout my territory and generally in Rajpootana.

2. The distress which exists amongst the poorer classes of my subjects and in the crowds of emigrants who pass daily through my State in search of food, has aroused my deepest sympathy.

3. I have considered with my Council the best means of mitigating these sufferings, and after much deliberation, I am convinced that, by removing all restrictions on the grain trade through my country, and by permitting its transit free of all State charges, I can best serve the cause I have at heart.

4. It is probable that the British district of Ajmere and several States in Rajpootana will be mainly dependant for supplies on grain, which must pass through Jeypore territory.

5. I have reason to know that it would not be possible, even if it were desirable, to secure by restrictions on exports a low range of prices in my dominions, whilst famine reigned in the neighbouring States, and I regard as ungenerous any policy which must add to the inevitable sufferings of the people of Rajwarah.

6. Guided by the above considerations, I direct that from the date of the publications of this order, all import and export duty on grain, as well as all taxes on the measurement or storage of grain, and all transit duties on grain, shall cease throughout the Jeypore territory, both in Khalsah and Jagheer lands.

7. All Tributaries, Jagheerdars, Bhoomeas, Puttails, Lumberdars, Putwarees, and servants of the State are directed to give immediate effect to these instructions.

8. Any person who, after the publication of this proclamation, shall be convicted of having demanded or realized any tax on grain, whether on the highway or in any city or town, shall be liable to suffer such punishment as is provided for the offences of fraud and unlawful exaction by the laws in force within the Jeypore territory.

A letter from the Deputy Accountant General, Central Provinces, No. 1870, dated the 28th August 1868, enquiring if the acting allowance of a Military Officer, officiating in a civil appointment, is one of the "extra or special allowances" referred to in the following quotation from Section V of the rules for the grant of leave of absence to Military Officers published in the General Order of the Military Department, No. 613, dated the 19th June 1868:—

"The term salary will signify the total amount drawn by an Officer whether as consolidated pay or staff allowance in addition to pay, but will not include any extra or special allowances."

RESOLUTION.—The enquiry of the Deputy Accountant General, Central Provinces, is answered in the affirmative. All acting allowances will therefore be omitted in the calculation of the furlough allowances of a Military Officer.

ORDERED, that the foregoing Resolution be published in the Gazette of India, and communicated to the Foreign, Home, and Public Works Departments; the Governments of Bengal, Madras Bombay, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab; the Comptroller General of Accounts; the Director General of the Post Office of India; the Mint Master, Calcutta; the Head Commissioner of Paper Currency, Calcutta; the Accountants General in Bengal, Madras, Bombay, the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and British Burmah; and the Deputy Accountants General, Central Provinces, Hyderabad, and Mysore.

FINANCIAL. INDIA OFFICE;

No. 377. London, 9th September 1868.

To His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council.

SIR,—I have considered in Council your Financial letter, dated the 6th July last, No. 156, recommending, with reference to the concessions recently granted to Chaplains of the Church of England—

"1st.—That such Chaplains of the Church of Scotland in India as now receive Rs. 700 per mensem, viz., one in each Presidency, should be allowed Rs. 800 per mensem from the date on which salaries at that rate were allowed to Senior Chaplains of the Church of England in Madras and Bombay.

"2nd.—That on the occurrence of vacancies, the salaries of the three Senior Chaplains of the Church of Scotland in the three Presidencies, who now receive more than Rs. 800 per mensem, should be reduced to that rate.

"3rd.—That the rates of pension allowed to Chaplains of the Church of England in India should be sanctioned for Chaplains of the Church of Scotland also.

"4th.—That a special allowance of Rs. 200 per mensem should be granted to the Senior Chaplain of the Church of Scotland in Bengal, and special allowances of Rs. 150 per mensem each to the Senior Chaplains of the Church of Scotland in Madras and Bombay."

2. These propositions are sanctioned.

I have, &c.,

(Sd.) STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

ORDERED, that in continuation of Financial Resolution No. 887, dated 6th July 1868, a copy of the above be communicated to the Home Department for information.

Ordered also, that a copy of the same be sent to the Comptroller General of Accounts and the several Provincial Accountants General and Deputy Accountants General in independent charge, and that it be published in the Gazette of India for general information.

The 16th October 1868.

No. 3081.

To His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council.

SIR,—I have received and considered in Council your Military Despatch No. 122, dated 23rd March 1868, in which you state that you are in favor of granting to Regimental Paymasters the Indian allowances of their relative rank without, however, recognising any necessity for further modifications in accordance with every change in the British service.

2. Concurring in these views, Her Majesty's Government authorise the grant to these Officers serving in India of the advantages, in respect to pay conferred on them by the Royal Warrant of 3rd February 1866. The extra pay should be calculated in accordance with the decision in my Financial Despatch No. 427 of 9th December 1867.

I have, &c.,

(Sd.) STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

POST OFFICE.

NOTIFICATIONS.

Nagpore, the 6th October 1868.

POST OFFICE PASSENGER SERVICE.

Nagpore and Jubbulpore Road.

(See annexed list of Stages, Bungalows, &c.)

Seats on the Ordinary Mail or Parcel Carts.

One seat will be allowed in the ordinary mail or parcel cart if the weight of the mails admit of a passenger proceeding by it; a seat can be booked beforehand only on this condition, and, if taken from an intermediate station, on the further condition that the accommodation is not already occupied by a traveller from the rear.

2. A passenger travelling by ordinary mail or parcel cart must start from the Post Office compound, as the mail and parcel carts are not allowed to go to the residence of individuals travelling by them.

3. For the convenience of passengers, the parcel carts stop one hour at Seonee Dâk Bungalow, half an hour at the Dâk Bungalow at Deolapar, and half an hour at the Dâk Bungalow, Doomah; but the mail cart will not stop, except for the purpose of greasing wheels at any place in transit.

4. Passengers by ordinary mail or parcel cart may halt at places on the road and betaken on by the following day's cart if the seat is vacant. Parties intending to halt should notify their intention when engaging their seat.

5. The fare for a seat in a mail or parcel cart is 2½ annas per mile, or for the whole distance from Jubbulpore to Nagpore or vice versâ Rs. 25.

6. Fares must be paid in advance, and the seats taken for the mail or parcel cart of a particular day. Fares once paid will not be returned even when the seat may not be availed of, except in the case of its being found to be occupied by a traveller from the rear, or if its not being available owing to the weight of the mails.

7. No dogs or animals may be taken in the mail or parcel cart.

8. Each passenger is allowed ten seers of baggage free; extra luggage may be taken in the cart when there is room for it, and when the cart is not fully laden, but all such extra luggage must be paid for at ordinary banghy parcel rates.

9. All baggage taken by a passenger in the cart (whether free or chargeable) is considered as in his charge and at his risk; and all such baggage must be weighed at the Post Office before the pass is given, or the cart allowed to start. Post Masters giving passes are responsible for the observance of this rule.

10. This pass given will state the place of departure and destination of the traveller, as well as the extra luggage (if any) allowed to be taken and the amount paid for it. The pass must be shown to any Post Office official who demands it, and must be given up to the Post Master or other Post Office official at the end of the journey. The Post Master at the place of arrival or at any other place is entitled to have the luggage of a passenger weighed and compared with the pass.

11. For extra baggage sent separately by bullock cart, see rule 34.

12. Passengers by ordinary mail or parcel cart must not in any way ill use or interfere with the mail establishment, or on any account or under pretext detain the mail in transit.

13. See also miscellaneous rules (35 to 38).

Special Carts (two wheeled with hoods) drawn by horses.

14. Special carts may be engaged between Nagpore (or Kamptee) and Jubbulpore, or between those places and Seonee, but full fares will have the preference, and engagements can be made at Seonee only under such conditions as may from time to time be laid down and exhibited in the Seonee Post Office.

15. The fare for a special cart between Nagpore (or Kamptee) and Jubbulpore is Rs. 100, and half that amount between those places and Seonee.

16. The maximum weight allowed to be carried in a special cart is five maunds, each adult person travelling being reckoned as equivalent to two maunds, and each child under twelve years old being reckoned as equivalent to one maund. Thus a single traveller taking a special cart may take with him three maunds of luggage, but if two adult persons travel, only one maund of luggage can be taken. Not more than two passengers are allowed in a special cart.

17. Fares must be paid in advance, and a pass will be given on payment showing the place of departure and destination of the cart and the amount paid for it. A copy of the preceding paragraph will be entered on every such pass. This pass must be shown to any Post Office official demanding it, and must be given up at the end of the journey. Fares paid will not be returned when the cart is not used, except under the special orders of the Chief Inspector of Post Offices.

18. Passengers proceeding by special cart between Nagpore (or Kamptee) and Jubbulpore may halt at intermediate places for a period or periods not exceeding in the aggregate 12 hours, which will allow of a night's rest of 10 hours at Seonee and of a halt of 1 hour at each of two other Bungalows (e. g., Deolapar and Lucknadown); and passengers proceeding to or from Seonee may halt for a period or periods not exceeding 6 hours in the aggregate.

19. Passengers proceeding by special cart must pay the tolls which at present are four annas at each of the two rivers Nerbudda (near Jubbulpore) and Kunhan (near Kamptee).

20. The coachman or any other official may cause the luggage taken in special cart to be weighed at any Post Office whether at the place of departure or arrival, or at an intermediate station; and any excess over the prescribed limit must be reported. Any such excess luggage actually conveyed in contravention of rules will be charged at banghy parcel rates.

21. Special carts will be sent to the residences of intending travellers, if within reasonable distance from the Post Office of the station of departure, and will proceed under like conditions to the residences at which passengers wish to be sent down at the end of the journey. Any detention at the place of departure exceeding half an hour will be reckoned as a stoppage under rule 18, and if such detention exceed two hours, the conveyance will be taken to the Post Office.

22. For extra luggage sent separately by bullock cart (see rule 34).

23. See also miscellaneous rules 35 to 38.

Bullock Bandies (two wheeled) and Bullock Carriages (four wheeled).

24. Bullock bandies and carriages may be engaged between Nagpore (or Kamptee) and Jubbulpore, or between those places and Seonee, but full fares will have the preference, and engagement can be made at Seonee only under such conditions as may from time to time be laid down and exhibited in the Seonee Post Office.

25. The fare between Nagpore (or Kamptee) and Jubbulpore is Rs. 42 (for a bandy), and Rs. 75 (for a carriage), and half those amounts between those places and Seonee.

26. The maximum weight allowed to be carried in a bullock bandy or carriage is eight maunds, each adult person travelling being reckoned as equivalent to two maunds, and each child under 12 years old being reckoned as equivalent to one maund. Thus a single traveller taking a bullock bandy or carriage may take with him six maunds of luggage, but if two adult persons travel, only four maunds of luggage can be taken, if three adult persons travel, only two maunds can be taken, and if four adult persons travel, no luggage can be taken.

27. Fares must be paid in advance, and a pass will be given on payment showing the place of departure and destination of the bandy or carriage, and the amount paid for it. A copy of the preceding paragraph will be entered on every such pass. This pass must be shown to any Post Office official demanding it, and must be given up at the end of the journey. Fares paid will not be returned when the bandy or carriage is not used, except under the special orders of the Chief Inspector of Post Offices.

28. Passengers proceeding by bullock bandy or carriage between Nagpore (or Kamptee) and Jubbulpore may halt at intermediate places for a period or periods not exceeding in the aggregate 18 hours, which will allow either of two nights' rest at intermediate Bungalows, or of stoppages of (say) 6 hours on each of three days. The time taken in actual travelling will ordinarily be about 54 hours, which, with stoppages aggregating 18 hours, will make the total period of transit 72 hours, or three days and three nights.

29. Passengers proceeding by bullock bandies or carriages must pay the tolls which at present are four annas at each of the two rivers,—Nerbudda (near Jubbulpore), and Kunhan (near Kamptee).

30. The coachman or any other Post Office official may cause the luggage taken in a bullock bandy or carriage to be weighed at any Post Office, whether at the place of departure or arrival, or at an intermediate station, and any excess over the prescribed limit must be reported. Any such excess luggage actually conveyed in contravention of rules will be charged at three times the rate mentioned in rule 34.

31. Bullock bandies or carriages will be sent to the residence of intending travellers if within reasonable distance from the Post Office of the station of departure, and will proceed under like conditions to the residence at which passengers may wish to be set down at the end of journey. Any detention at the place of departure exceeding half an hour will be reckoned as a stoppage under rule 28, and if such detention exceed two hours, the conveyance will be taken back to the Post Office.

32. For extra luggage sent separately by bullock cart (see rule 34).

33. See also miscellaneous rules (35 to 38).

Passengers' extra baggage sent separately by Bullock Carts.

34. Passengers may send extra luggage between Nagpore (or Kamptee) and Jubbulpore, or between those places and Seonee by separate bullock cart conveyance, for which they will be charged at the rate of Rs. 3-8 per maund between Nagpore (or Kamptee) and Jubbulpore, Rs. 1½ per maund between those places and Seonee. Fractions of less than half a maund will be reckoned as half a maund, and fractions above half a maund as a whole maund. Servants going in charge of baggage will be charged at the rate of 2½ maunds, half maund being allowed as free baggage to the servant.

Miscellaneous.

35. Seats on a mail or parcel cart may be booked at any Post Office on the line, and special carts or bullock bandies or bullock carriages may be engaged at Nagpore, Kamptee, Seonee or Jubbulpore.

36. All complaints against the road establishment should be made to the Post Master or Mail Superintendent.

37. A breach of any of these rules renders the traveller liable to forfeiture of fare and loss of passage in addition to any other notice of the breach which may be necessary.

38. Passengers must not interfere with the greasing, examining, &c., of the vehicles while in transit.

NOTES.—The places marked * in the Table are optional ports of call, i.e., ports at which the Company's steamers are not bound by the Contract to touch.

The Company have further the right to call at False Point, Pooree, Ganjam, Masulipatam, Tellicherry, Goa, Vingorla, and Rutnagherry.

The dates of arrival and departure given in the Table have been calculated on the supposition of the stay at Madras being only twelve hours of daylight, and only three hours of daylight at each of the other intermediate ports, but under the Contract, the Company have power to extend the stay at Madras to forty-eight hours in all, and at other intermediate ports to twenty-four hours in all.

The Government has also the power, when there are officers or troops on board, to require the steamers to touch at any other port on the Coast.

The 15th October 1868.

Under the provisions of a Convention between the General Post Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the General Post Office of the United States of America signed at Washington on the 28th July, and in London on the 14th August 1868, mails will be exchanged, from and after the 1st November, between India and the United States of America viâ Hong-Kong and San Francisco under the following conditions, viz. :—

The service will be performed by British Mail Packets between India (Calcutta, Madras, Bombay or Aden) and Hong-Kong viâ Galle, and by United States Mail Packets between Hong-Kong and San Francisco viâ Yokohama.

Only such correspondence will be sent by this route as may be specially directed to be forwarded "viâ Hong-Kong."

The pre-payment of letters sent by this route is optional. Paid letters will be delivered without charge in the country of destination, and unpaid letters will be charged on delivery at the rates fixed for pre-paid letters sent in the opposite direction, together with a fine of 4 annas (in India), or 12 cents (in the United States). Insufficiently paid letters will be treated as if wholly unpaid.

Newspapers and packets of newspapers, books or patterns must be pre-paid in full, and will be delivered without charge in the country of destination.

The rates of charge for pre-paid correspondence sent from India to the United States of America by this route are given in the following table, in which have also been included the rates charged on similar correspondence sent viâ Bombay and the United Kingdom :—

An Office memorandum No. 290, dated 28th May, from the Military Department, forwarding for disposal certain papers relative to a proposal for the interchange of proceedings between the various Sanitary Commissioners.

RESOLUTION.—In determining the nature of the duties to be discharged by the new Sanitary Commissioners, it must be remembered that these appointments were created solely for the purpose of improving the sanitary condition of the people. Considering the magnitude and the difficulty of the task to be undertaken, the supervision of the public health will, the Governor General in Council thinks, take up all the time and tax all the energy and ability of the Sanitary Commissioners. It may, therefore, be assumed that these officers should not be called on to undertake any work which is not intimately associated with the special objects for which they were appointed; that they should not have transferred to them any duty now performed by others, unless that duty is unmistakably one which more properly belongs to them; and that their work should be so arranged as to prevent, as far as practicable, all possibility of collision between them and other officials.

2. Under this aspect, the Governor General in Council considers that the sketch of rules circulated for the consideration of the Local Governments and Administrations with the orders of the 12th February, requires some modification.

3. His Excellency in Council now proposes only to lay down some general instructions with the object of attaining a certain amount of uniformity of system, all further details will be disposed of as the Local Governments and Administrations may think best. In paragraph 14 of the orders of the 12th February, it was suggested that the Sanitary Commissioners, while having no control over jails, dispensaries, and vaccination, should visit in the course of their tours all jails, dispensaries, and hospitals, as well as all other public institutions, and remark on their sanitary condition. On mature consideration, the Governor General in Council is of opinion that this is not advisable. The jails and dispensaries have already their responsible heads. Official inspections by the Sanitary Commissioners could not fail to divide responsibility and weaken authority, while the comments made on these institutions by the Sanitary Commissioners might lead to acrimonious and unprofitable correspondence. His Excellency in Council is accordingly pleased to direct that Sanitary Commissioners shall be held to have no duties connected with the management of jails and dispensaries, or with the operations of the Vaccination Department, or any institution under the control of the heads of other departments. It is by no means intended that the Sanitary Commissioners should not visit and make themselves acquainted with the sanitary condition of such ~~institutions, but~~ merely that they should exercise no official interference with them. The case of Oudh is an exception to this rule, as in this Province, under special arrangements, the Sanitary Commissioner is also ex-officio Inspecter of Jails and Dispensaries.

4. The Governments of the Punjab and the North-Western Provinces not only wish that the Sanitary Commissioner should be Inspector General of Dispensaries, relieving the Inspector General of Prisons of the duty, but the latter Government further proposes that the whole of the civil medical establishments should be placed under the Sanitary Commissioner, who should be appointed Under Secretary to the Government. A similar plan has been recommended by the Chief Commissioner of Oudh. As no other appointment which the Sanitary Commissioner could hold would so completely occupy his time and divert his attention from his own proper work as the medical supervision of a whole province, the Governor General in Council does not consider that it will be advisable to add this to the Sanitary Commissioner's duties. The question of how the administration of the Civil Medical Department of each Local Government and Administration can best be conducted, is now under the consideration of the Government of India.

5. The instructions contained in paragraph 17 of the previous orders, that the Sanitary Commissioners should prepare a carefully digested report of their proceedings quarterly for submission to the Local Governments within a month of the close of each quarter, have been objected to, on the ground that the labor of preparing these reports would be considerable, and that it is doubtful whether they would serve any useful purpose. On the whole, His Excellency in Council thinks that an annual report, as concise and short as possible, will be sufficient. But all questions requiring the immediate attention of the Local Governments should be submitted for orders without delay.

6. In paragraph 11 of the circular, it was proposed that the Sanitary Commissioner should keep a watch over the food-supplies within his jurisdiction, and take early note of any anticipated deficiencies in the agricultural out-turn. Exception has been taken to this rule by some of the Local Governments and Administrations, and the Governor General in Council, on a re-consideration of the matter, thinks that the work more properly belongs to the district officers, and should not be imposed on the Sanitary Commissioners.

7. In other respects the Local Governments generally concur in the views which have been expressed by the Government of India. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, however, supporting the opinion of the local Sanitary Commissioner, Dr. Smith, believes that the task sketched in the circular of the 12th February is difficult, if not impracticable, and suggests "the absolute necessity of reducing to reasonable limits the points to which a solitary Sanitary Commissioner, appointed over a country as large as France, should address himself in the first instance." Dr. Smith objects in particular to having anything to do with the registration of births and deaths, and proposes that this should form the work of a special department. His Excellency in Council admits that the circumstances of Bengal are to a certain extent peculiar, and he does not wish that the duty of superintending this registration shall be made over to the Sanitary Commissioner, if the Local Government consider that some other arrangement is preferable. Although it may not be possible at present to carry out the system of registering births and deaths to its full extent in every province, something at least should be done towards attaining this very important object. Where it may not yet be advisable to embrace the whole population, the collection of vital statistics should be commenced in all the large towns without delay. There can be no doubt that, without a good system of registration of births and deaths, sanitary knowledge can make little progress. It will be left to the several Local Governments and Administrations to work out their own schemes according to the means at their disposal. The circumstances of the various provinces are so different that it is impossible to lay down any general rules. But the Government of India must again urge forcibly on the Local Governments the great importance of the question.

8. There are a few other questions connected with this subject which require notice. The Government of the Punjab proposes that its Sanitary Commissioner should not only be ex-officio Member of all Municipal Committees, but of Cantonment Committees also. It is certainly very desirable that he should be a Member of all Municipal Committees, for the greater portion of his work will lie in towns; but his duties are already sufficient without being supplemented by any duties connected with Cantonments. These latter are moreover provided with Military Sanitary Officers, and the interference of the Civil Sanitary Commissioner may lead to conflicts of opinion, which had better be avoided. Accordingly, Sanitary Commissioners should not exercise any official supervision over Military Cantonments, although they will of course be entitled to visit them and make themselves acquainted with their sanitary condition.

9. In many cases lock hospitals have been established, and measures have been taken for the prevention of venereal diseases, not only among the troops, but among the civil population of the towns in the vicinity of Military Cantonments. There is usually no possibility of controlling these diseases among the troops, unless constant and vigilant attention be also paid to the subject outside the Cantonment boundaries. The Governor General in Council considers that there is no duty which will more properly fall upon the Sanitary Commissioners than the duty of supervising measures taken for the purpose of guarding the European soldiers against the dangers to which they are thus exposed, and which cannot be met by any amount of care exercised within the limits of the Cantonments alone. The Governor General in Council trusts that the Local Governments and Administrations will never allow this most important subject to be lost sight of, and he thinks that there will be no better practical test of the efficiency of a Sanitary Commissioner than the success or failure of the measures which are taken for the prevention of these diseases.

10. The nature of the connection of the Sanitary Commissioners with Civil Surgeons remains to be defined. Civil Surgeons are subordinate in their several departments to the Deputy Inspector General of Hospitals, the Inspector General of Prisons, and the Inspector General of Dispensaries. Without actually placing these officers, who have been already declared to be the health officers of their districts, under the orders of the Sanitary Commissioner, His Excellency in Council depends upon their giving that officer their fullest co-operation and assistance. The exact amount of authority to be exercised over Civil Surgeons by the Sanitary Commissioner is a matter which may be left to the Local Governments to decide. Whatever arrangements, however, be adopted, the authority of the Sanitary Commissioner should be, as far as possible, confined to requiring the Civil Surgeons to furnish certain information on matters affecting the public health.

11. Nothing was said in the circular of the 12th February as to the relations between the new Sanitary Commissioners and the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India. The subject is, however, one of importance. It is desirable to strengthen, as far as possible, the means of the Local Governments in judging of the propriety in doubtful cases of the recommendations made by their sanitary officers. The Governor General in Council has already heard, in more than one case, of the issue of orders and circulars, which must be most irritating to the people, and which, instead of doing good, would in a sanitary point of view probably do harm. It is very desirable to prevent the issue of such circulars until they have been carefully considered by the highest sanitary authority. There is little fear of the Sanitary Commissioners wanting energy. The danger rather is that their zeal may outstrip their judgment, and that they may urge changes and reforms much more quickly than the people can understand or appreciate. Any rash attempt to force on improvements which are extremely distasteful to the people, would not only fail to accomplish the object in view, but might be productive of results highly objectionable and even dangerous politically. There is no sanitary authority which can exercise any check upon the recommendations of the local sanitary officers, except the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India, and he can afford the necessary amount of supervision without in any way interfering with the full authority which the Governor General in Council desires to leave to the Local Governments. It is desirable, on other grounds, that the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India should obtain the fullest information regarding the public health of each province. Possessed of all available information relative to the sanitary condition of the civil population, the Native army, and the prisoners in jails, he should always be in a position to give to the Government of India the best opinion regarding many matters of importance affecting the health of the European troops. The new sanitary officers will have nothing to do with Military Cantonments. The central sanitary authority should, therefore, be able to utilize and apply for the benefit of the European soldiers the information and experience derived from a knowledge of what is going on among the general population.

12. Whenever a Sanitary Commissioner thinks it necessary that any general instructions or circulars referring to matters of considerable sanitary importance should be issued, he should invariably, except in cases of real emergency, of which the Local Government or Administration will be the judge, ask the opinion of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India on his proposals before submitting them to the Local Government or Administration to which he is subordinate. In judging of the propriety of such recommendations, the Local Governments will thus have the benefit of the opinion of the Imperial Sanitary Officer as well as that of their own sanitary advisers. It will of course rest with the Local Governments or Administrations, in case of a difference of opinion between the two authorities, to adopt whichever view they think best. Under this system the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India will in fact be the adviser of the Local Governments and Administrations also. No circulars or orders should ever be issued by the local Sanitary Commissioners, except under express authority given in each separate case by the Local Governments and Administrations.

13. The local Sanitary Commissioners will be entirely subordinate to the Local Governments and Administrations and to no other authority, and the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India will have no power to issue to them any instructions of his own. But it is necessary that the latter officer should at all times receive complete information on every matter of sanitary interest, and he will be authorized to apply direct to the local Sanitary Commissioners for such statistics and information as he may require, and which it is in their power to supply. If in any case they are unable to furnish what has been asked for, they should explain the reasons to the Imperial Sanitary Commissioner, or, if necessary, refer to the Local Government or Administration under which they may be serving with the view of obtaining the necessary information, if possible.

14. Each Sanitary Commissioner should furnish annually to the Local Government or Administration to which he is subordinate a report containing information of all matters of importance affecting the public health of the province which have come to his notice during the past year. With this exception, no reports or proceedings of the Sanitary Commissioners should ordinarily be published by the Local Governments. Any special reports regarding the outbreak of epidemic disease or other matters of importance should be immediately sent by the local Sanitary Commissioner to the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India. When orders have been passed upon them by the Local Government, copies of these should be forwarded for the information of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India, either by the Local Government or by the local Sanitary Commissioner, as may be most convenient. Everything of general interest will appear in the proceedings of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India, and these will be published and circulated.

15. Briefly stated, the duties of the local Sanitary Commissioners under this revised plan will be as follows, viz. :—

(1).—To ascertain the existing sanitary condition of the country under their charge, and suggest measures for its improvement;

(2).—To advise Local Governments and Administrations in matters concerning the public health;

(3).—To collect information as to the unusual prevalence of any particular disease or diseases in any particular locality, and to suggest measures for their removal; and to supervise measures for the prevention of venereal disease in the neighbourhood of Military Cantonments;

(4).—In case of any unusual visitation, to proceed to the spot, endeavour to trace its source, and aid in carrying out remedial measures;

(5).—To examine all localities in which cholera, fevers, and similar diseases are endemic or localized, and propose means for removing them;

(6).—To assist in organizing, as well as circumstances will allow, a proper system of registration of births and deaths, unless this duty be entrusted by the Local Government to some other officer;

(7).—To prepare a medical topography of their respective provinces or presidencies;

(8).—To submit to Local Governments and Administrations a carefully digested annual report of their proceedings, and in case of the outbreak of epidemic diseases to forward early reports of all their proceedings;

(9).—To furnish the Imperial Sanitary Commissioner with copies of their reports, and generally to keep him informed on all matters of sanitary importance.

16. The propriety of appointing the Sanitary Commissioners to be Under Secretaries to the Local Governments and Administrations, is advocated by the Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces and the Chief Commissioner of Oudh. But the plan has already been disapproved by the Secretary of State, and the Governor General in Council does not consider it necessary to request its re-consideration.

17. The Resident at Hyderabad proposes to alter the arrangement under which the sanitary duties in Berar are to be performed by the Sanitary Commissioner of the Central Provinces, and to have a separate officer for Berar, who would perform the duties of Inspector of Prisons and Superintendent of Vaccination, as well as those of Sanitary Commissioner, "rather than to append the province in each of the three cases to the charge of the corresponding officers in the Central Provinces." If such an arrangement can, as the Resident believes, be carried out with very trifling additional expense, it might probably be adopted with advantage. The Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces will be consulted on this point.

18. The scheme sanctioned by the Secretary of State on the recommendation of the Government of India, does not provide for the appointment of a Sanitary Commissioner for Mysore. But a copy of the circular of the 12th February was, by a clerical error, forwarded to the Commissioner, and Mr. Bowring has submitted for sanction certain arrangements that he would propose to make for the performance of the sanitary duties in the Mysore territory. But he does not anticipate any good results from those arrangements. The end proposed to be attained by the nomination of a Sanitary Commissioner can, in his opinion, be as well secured by the local Municipal Committees, acting under the guidance of the Deputy Superintendents and Divisional Medical Officers. Under these circumstances, the Governor General in Council does not think it necessary to consider at present the propriety of appointing a Sanitary Commissioner for Mysore.

19. It now remains to consider the question of the office establishment, travelling allowance, and office-rent to be assigned to the several Sanitary Commissioners. Considering the nature of the duties entrusted to the Sanitary Commissioners, the Governor General in Council does not think that the office work will be heavy. Experience alone can, however, show what establishments are actually necessary for them. For the present, the establishment asked for by the Government of the North-Western Provinces (Rs. 240 a month) seems to be reasonable. The same amount may be allowed for Bengal, but less costly establishments should be sufficient for the other provinces. No sufficient reason has been shown for allowing the services of Sub-Assistant Surgeons to the Sanitary Commissioner in Bengal, as has been proposed.

20. Office-rent ought not to be allowed, unless under very exceptional circumstances when no accommodation can be found in any of the existing Government buildings.

21. As regards travelling allowance, the various Sanitary Commissioners will be allowed to draw, when travelling, 8 annas a mile by road and 3 annas by rail, and Rs. 4 per day during halts, provided that the sum charged for each halt shall not exceed Rs. 50. The papers will be referred to the Financial Department for final orders on the points noticed in this and the two preceding paragraphs.

22. The Office of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India also requires to be placed on a better footing. It has been the opinion of some authorities that the maintenance of this Office will be unnecessary, now that separate Sanitary Commissioners have been appointed for each province; so far from this being the case, the Governor General in Council is convinced that it will become one of greater importance than before, and that it may be considerably improved in efficiency and usefulness.

23. Accurate statistics of mortality and disease form the basis of sanitary science, and are the only index of its progress. Our knowledge of facts bearing upon these subjects in India is unfortunately very limited at present. The tables of Dr. Bryden, Statistical Officer, Indian Medical Department, which have hitherto been appended to the Annual Sanitary Reports, are the most valuable data possessed by the Government of India regarding the sanitary condition of the British and Native armies and the jails of the Bengal Presidency. It is of the greatest importance that these tables should be continued. But the unsatisfactory position which Dr. Bryden now occupies should be ameliorated. He is required to prepare returns showing the sickness and mortality among the European and Native troops and in the jails throughout the Bengal Presidency; and when the system of registering births and deaths among the general population becomes developed, he will also be expected to check and tabulate the results. Dr. Bryden's work is of great and imperial consequence; but he is attached as a mere adjunct to the Indian Medical Department, which has now nothing to do with European troops, particulars regarding which are of the first importance; for the proper sanitary and medical administration of the jails in each province, special officers are responsible. The Native troops are the only portion of the community, with the vital statistics of which the Indian Medical Department is directly concerned, and these troops supply a very small portion of the work which properly devolves on a statistical officer. Over many of the officers by whom registration returns will be furnished, the Inspector General of the Indian Medical Department has no authority. The time of Dr. Bryden, which ought to be devoted to the preparation of these important statistics, is now taken up to a great extent in preparing tables which have little value in connection with vital statistics, and which can easily be compiled by ordinary clerks, such as the elaborate tables required by the local Medical Department to illustrate the operations of the dispensaries in Lower Bengal.

24. The Governor General in Council is, therefore, of opinion that Dr. Bryden should be attached to the Office of the Imperial Sanitary Commissioner, which has to deal with questions affecting the health of the country at large, and which will be in a position to utilize to the utmost the facts and returns collected by him. His Excellency in Council is accordingly pleased to direct the immediate transfer of Dr. Bryden and his establishment to the Office of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India. Although Dr. Bryden's present establishment is known to be inadequate, there will be no difficulty in providing him with a sufficient staff when the salaries now allowed for his clerks are combined with those allowed for the Office of the Sanitary Commissioner. The want of a separate statistical officer will not be felt in the Indian Medical Department, and if thought necessary, Dr. Bryden can forward to the Inspector General of Hospitals, Lower Provinces, a weekly or monthly return of sick in Native Regiments.

ORDERED, that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the Governments of Bengal, North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab; the Chief Commissioners of Oudh and British Burmah, and the Resident at Hyderabad, for information and guidance; that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces for information and guidance, and for early report on the subject referred to in paragraph 17;

that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the Commissioner of Mysore for information;

that a copy of this Resolution, with a copy of the replies to the circular of the 12th February, be forwarded to the Financial Department for information and for the issue of further orders in regard to paragraphs 19 to 21; that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the Military Department for information and for communication of the order contained in that last paragraph to the Inspector General of Hospitals, Indian Medical Service, Lower Provinces. It is understood that, in anticipation of the orders about Dr. Bryden being carried out, no officer will be appointed to act as Secretary to the Sanitary Commissioner in place of Dr. Cuningham, now acting as Sanitary Commissioner. It is, therefore, desirable that the transfer of Dr. Bryden's services be carried out as quickly as possible. Original papers received with Office memorandum, dated 28th May, returned;

that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India for information and guidance; that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the Inspector General of Hospitals, Indian Medical Service, Lower Provinces, for information and guidance; that extract, paragraphs 22 to 24 of this Resolution, with a copy of the endorsement to the Military Department, be forwarded to the Statistical Officer, Indian Medical Department, for information and guidance.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Simla on Thursday, the 15th October 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, presiding.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.
The Hon'ble G. N. Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. S. Maine.
The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C.B.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.
The Hon'ble Sir George Couper, Bart., C.B.

LOCK-HOSPITALS BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE moved that the report of the Select Committee on the Bill to enable Municipalities to provide for Lock-Hospitals be taken into consideration. He said that he had already fully explained the nature of the Bill, which was merely a permissive measure; that the Committee had made no change therein; and that he had observed with satisfaction that, in anticipation of the Bill's becoming law, the Calcutta Justices of the Peace had included in their Budget for the ensuing year a sum for the maintenance of Lock-Hospitals.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE then moved that the Bill be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned till Monday, the 19th October 1868.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 8th October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

ACT No. XXV OF 1868.

An Act to define the jurisdiction of the Courts in Coorg.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define the jurisdiction of the Civil and Criminal Courts in the Province of Coorg; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called "The Coorg Courts' Act."

Commencement of Act.

This Section and Section 25 shall take effect at once and the rest of this Act shall come into operation on the first day of December 1868.

Grades of Courts in Coorg.

2. There shall be six grades of Civil Courts in the province of Coorg, which shall be in addition to any Courts of Small Causes and to any other Courts established under any Act hereafter passed by the Governor General of India in Council (that is to say),—

(1.) The Court of the Súbahdár of the second class:

(2.) The Court of the Súbahdár of the first class:

(3.) The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the second class:

(4.) The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the first class:

(5.) The Court of the Superintendent; and

(6.) The Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

The Criminal Courts in the said Province shall be those referred to in the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Civil Jurisdiction.

Power to declare grades of Súbahdárs and Assistant Superintendents.

3. Subject to any orders that may from time to time be issued by the Governor General of India in Council, the Commissioner of Coorg shall have power to declare to which of the said grades any Súbahdár and any Assistant Superintendent shall belong.

Power to invest Párbatiyagárs and Naib Súbahdárs with jurisdiction up to Rupees fifty.

4. The Commissioner may invest any Párbatiyagár and any Náib Súbahdár with power to try and determine suits for money due whether on bond or other contract or for rent, or for moveable property, or for the value of such property, or for damages, when the debt, damage, or demand does not exceed in amount or value the sum of Rupees fifty, and to prescribe the local limits within which the Párbatiyagár or Naib Súbahdár so invested shall exercise such power.

Jurisdiction of Súbahdár of second class.

5. The Court of the Súbahdár of the second class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees one hundred in value or amount.

Jurisdiction of Súbahdár of first class.

6. The Court of the Súbahdár of the first class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees three hundred in value or amount.

Jurisdiction of Assistant Superintendent of second class.

7. The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the second class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees one thousand in value or amount, and, subject to the provisions and limitations hereinafter prescribed, to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions in suits, and (where an appeal is allowed by the rules of procedure) from the orders of the Courts of the Súbahdárs of the first and second classes respectively, and of Párbatiyagárs or Náib Súbahdárs invested as aforesaid.

Jurisdiction of Assistant Superintendent of first class.

8. The Court of the Assistant Superintendent of the first class shall have power to try and determine suits of every description in which the subject-matter does not exceed Rupees three thousand in value or amount, and, subject to the provisions and limitations hereinafter prescribed, to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions in suits, and (where an appeal is allowed by the rules of procedure for the time being in force in Coorg) from the orders of the Courts of the Súbahdárs of the first and second classes respectively, and of Párbatiyagárs or Náib Súbahdárs invested as aforesaid.

Jurisdiction of Superintendent.

9. The Court of the Superintendent shall have power to try and determine suits of every description and of any amount, and to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions in suits and (where an appeal is allowed by the said rules of procedure) from the orders of the Courts of Súbahdárs and Assistant Superintendents of both classes respectively, and of Párbatiyagárs or Náib Súbahdárs invested as aforesaid.

Jurisdiction of Judicial Commissioner.

10. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner shall have power to hear and determine appeals from the original decisions of the Superintendent in suits, and (where an appeal is allowed by the said rules of procedure) from the orders of the Superintendent, and also special appeals from the decisions passed by the Superintendent or by an Assistant Superintendent of either grade on regular appeal:

Provided that such special appeals shall lie on the ground of the decision being contrary to some law or usage having the force of law, or of a substantial error or defect in law in the procedure or investigation of the case, which may have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits, and on no other grounds:

Provided also that no special appeal shall lie from any decision or order passed on regular appeal after the passing of this Act, in any suit of the nature cognizable in a Court of Small Causes under Act No. XI of 1865, section six, when the debt, damage or demand for which the original suit is instituted does not exceed three hundred rupees; but every such order or decision shall be final.

Time for presenting appeals.

11. The memorandum of appeal prepared in the form and containing the particulars mentioned in the Code of Civil Procedure shall be presented in the Court empowered to hear an appeal within the period hereinafter specified, unless the appellant shows sufficient cause to the satisfaction of such Court for not having presented the memorandum of appeal within such period, that is to say, thirty days if the appeal lie to the Assistant Superintendents or Superintendent, and ninety days if the appeal lie to the Judicial Commissioner.

The said period shall be reckoned from and exclusive of the day on which the decision or order appealed against was passed, and also exclusive of such time as may be requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree or order from which the appeal is made.

Special appeals shall be presented in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner within the period hereinbefore fixed for appeals.

Extraordinary original jurisdiction of Judicial Commissioner.

12. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner shall have power to remove and to try and determine as a Court of extraordinary original jurisdiction, any suit within the jurisdiction of any Court in the said province when he thinks proper to do so, either on the agreement of the parties to that effect, or for purposes of justice, the reasons for so doing being recorded on the proceedings of his Court.

Judicial Commissioner to superintend and to frame rules of practice for subordinate Courts.

13. The Judicial Commissioner shall have superintendence over all Courts in the said province, and shall have power to call for returns and to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of such Courts, and also to prescribe forms for every proceeding in the said Courts for which he thinks necessary that a form be provided, and also for keeping all books, entries and accounts to be kept by the officers, and also settle tables of fees to be allowed to the attorneys, vakeels, and all clerks and officers of such Courts, and from time to time to alter any such rule, form or table.

The rules, forms, and tables so made, framed and settled, shall be used and observed in the said Courts: Provided that such rules, forms and tables be not inconsistent with the provisions of any law in force for the time being, and shall before they are issued have received the sanction of the Commissioner.

Governor General in Council may confer powers of Superintendent or Assistant Superintendent.

14. Whenever the state of the public business requires it, the Governor General of India in Council may invest any person with the powers of a Superintendent or Assistant Superintendent in any part of the province of Coorg.

Court in which suit shall be instituted.

15. Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it: Provided that no suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes which may hereafter be established, shall be heard and determined in any other Court having any jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court of Small Causes.

Appeal to lie from all decisions, except when expressly prohibited.

16. Except when otherwise provided in any law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from the decisions of the Courts of original jurisdiction to the Courts authorized by this Act to hear appeals from the decisions of those Courts.

Distribution of business among subordinate Courts.

17. The Superintendent may direct the business in the Courts subordinate to him whether or not they have their sittings in the same place, to be distributed among such Courts in such way as he thinks fit: Provided that no Court shall try any suit in which the amount or value of the claim shall exceed its proper jurisdiction.

Local limits within which Appellate Courts shall exercise appellate jurisdiction.

18. The Superintendent shall from time to time, with the concurrence and approval of the Commissioner, prescribe to each of the Appellate Courts subordinate to him such local limits within which they shall respectively exercise their appellate jurisdiction.

Transfer of suits from subordinate Court to that of the Superintendent or Assistant.

19. The Superintendent may, on the petition of either party, or in the absence of such petition, withdraw any suit instituted in any Court subordinate to him, and try such suit himself or refer it for trial to any other such subordinate Court, and competent in respect of the value or amount of the suit to try the same.

The Superintendent may also withdraw any appeal instituted in the Court of any Assistant Superintendent subordinate to him, and try the appeal himself or refer it for trial to the Court of any other Assistant Superintendent in his province.

Transfer of suits from one subordinate Court to another.

20. The Judicial Commissioner may order that the cognizance of any suit or appeal instituted in any Court subordinate to his Court, not being a Court of Small Causes, shall be transferred to his own Court or to any other such subordinate Court competent in respect of the value or amount of the subject matter of the suit or appeal to try the same.

Criminal Jurisdiction.

Superintendent to be Chief Officer charged with executive administration of District in criminal matter.

21. For purposes of criminal jurisdiction, the Superintendent of Coorg shall be taken to be the Chief Officer charged with the executive administration of a District in criminal matters.

Power to appoint Session Judge of Coorg.

22. The Governor General of India in Council may from time to time appoint any subject of Her Majesty to be Session Judge of Coorg, and may also from time to time suspend or remove any person so appointed.

The Session Judge shall, as often as may be necessary for the trial of offenders, hold sessions in the said Province. Provided that he and the Judicial Commissioner respectively may hear and determine appeals beyond the limits of the same Province.

Appeals from sentences of Superintendent and other Officers vested with full powers.

23. Appeals from sentences and orders passed by the Superintendent or by any officer subordinate to him exercising full powers of a Magistrate, from which an appeal is allowed under the Code of Criminal Procedure, shall lie to the Judicial Commissioner, and shall be heard and determined by him:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prevent the Judicial Commissioner from exercising under the said Code all or any of the powers of the High Court vested in him.

Confirmation of sentences passed by Superintendent of Ashtagram.

24. All sentences and orders heretofore passed by the Superintendent of Ashtagram in his capacity of Session Judge of Coorg shall be deemed to be as valid as if this Act had then been passed, and he had been appointed, under section 22, Session Judge of Coorg.

Extension of Code of Criminal Procedure.

25. The Code of Criminal Procedure shall extend to the said Province, and shall be deemed to have been in force therein from the ninth day of December 1862.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 15th October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

ACT No. XXVI OF 1868.

An Act to enable Municipalities to provide for Lock-Hospitals.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to enable all Municipalities in British India to provide out of the municipal funds for the maintenance of Lock-Hospitals and generally for the prevention of contagious venereal disease; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Power to Municipal Committees to devote funds to maintaining Lock-Hospitals, &c.

1. Notwithstanding anything contained in any Act of the Governor General of India in Council, of the Governor of Madras in Council, of the Governor of Bombay in Council, of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal in Council, or in any other law for the time being in force, it shall be lawful for every Municipal Corporation, Municipal Committee, or other Body of persons duly appointed to conduct the affairs of a municipality in British India to pay, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, out of the funds at their disposal towards the maintenance of the hospital provided under section twelve of Act No. XIV of 1868 (for the prevention of certain contagious diseases) within the limits of the place for which they are so appointed and towards defraying the cost of the medical treatment, lodging, clothing and food of the women detained in such hospital, and of the allowance provided under section nineteen of the same Act for the subsistence of prostitutes residing within the limits aforesaid, such part as may from time to time be agreed on by and between the Corporation, Committee or Body and the Local Government of the total cost of the said maintenance, treatment, lodging, clothing, food and allowance as annually estimated by such Government.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 21st October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

ACT No. XXVII OF 1868.

An Act to exempt certain Instruments from the Indian Registration Act, 1866.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to exempt expressly from compulsory registration under the Indian Registration Act, 1866, certain documents heretofore or hereafter executed by or in favour of Government; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Scheduled documents exempted from Act XX of 1866.

1.—Nothing contained in the said Act shall be deemed to require, or to have at any time required, the registration of any of the documents or maps comprised in the Schedule hereto annexed.

But all such documents and maps shall, for the purposes of sections forty-eight and forty-nine of the same Act, be deemed to have been and to be registered in accordance with its provisions.

Inspection and copies of scheduled documents.

2.—Subject to such rules and the previous payment of such fees as the Local Government may from time to time prescribe in this behalf, all documents and maps specified in the first, second, and third clauses of the said schedule shall be open to the inspection of any person applying to inspect the same, and, subject as aforesaid, copies of such documents shall be given to all persons applying for such copies.

Copies of sanads to be filed by Registrar.

3. A copy of every document mentioned in the fourth clause of the said schedule and executed on or after the first day of May 1866, shall, in the case of every such document heretofore executed, as soon as may be after the passing of this Act, and in the case of every such document hereafter executed, as soon as may be after its execution, be sent by the Local Government to the Registrar or to every Registrar within whose district the whole or any part of the immoveable property comprised in such document is situate, and shall be filed by him in his Book 1.

This Act to be read with Act XX of 1866.

4. This Act shall be read with and taken as part of Act No. XX of 1866.

SCHEDULE.

(1). Documents issued, received, or attested by any officer engaged in making a settlement or revision of settlement of land revenue, and which form part of the records of such settlement.

(2). Documents and maps issued, received, or authenticated by any officer engaged on behalf of Government in making or revising the survey of any land, other than waste land, and which form part of the record of such survey.

(3). Documents which, under any law for the time being in force, are filed annually by patwáris or other officers charged with the preparation of village records.

(4). Sanads, inám title-deeds, and other documents purporting to be or to evidence grants or assignments by Government of land or of any interest in land, in reward for special services.

No. 339.

With reference to Notification No. 205, dated 28th June 1867, in which the provisions of Act VII of 1864 were applied to the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, the following rules for the regulation of salt traffic within the Customs jurisdiction in the Berars, which have been approved by His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council, are published for general information :—

Rules for regulation of Salt Traffic in Berar within Customs Jurisdiction.

1. Salt in excess of one seer found entering Berar, viz., crossing the Customs line from north-west, west, south, or south-east shall, if unprotected by rowannah, be liable to confiscation and sale, but the owner of such salt shall not be liable to the penalties prescribed by Act XIV of 1843, unless the salt be in excess of five seers.

2. Salt not exceeding in quantity three maunds* may circulate from village to village within Customs jurisdiction, and may cross the Customs line from north, north-east, or east without hindrance. But if it attempt to re-cross from north-west, west, south, south-west, or south-east, it will, if uncovered by rowannah, be liable to penalty, that is to say, if a trader has once taken his salt from within to outside the Customs cordon, he cannot re-cross the latter without a fresh payment of duty.

* About a bullock load.

3. Persons desirous of bringing from the interior of Berar into Customs jurisdiction, or of keeping and storing within the limits of such jurisdiction salt which has already paid duty in excess of three maunds, shall first apply to the nearest Customs Officer, or Tehseel or Police Stations, and the Officer in charge of any of these, on receiving a verbal declaration that the salt has been purchased in the interior of Berar, shall grant a pass under his own official seal and signature.

4. Such pass may be in Oordoo or Mahrattee, and shall run as follows :—

Pass for maunds of salt, the property of , laden on (here follows description of carriage) current until , and shall bear the official seal and signature of the Officer who grants it; such Officer shall be empowered to refuse to grant a pass, if, on examination, he shall deem the salt to be more than the quantity stated by the applicant, and shall require the applicant to cause the salt to be weighed.

5. Such pass shall be current for ten days from date of issue, and for no longer, and if the salt which it covers continue to circulate or remain stored within Customs jurisdiction, it must be renewed at one of the public offices indicated in Rule 3.

6. When application is thus made for renewal of a pass, the Officer who receives such application shall question the applicant as to the quantity disposed of during the currency of his former pass, and shall then examine the salt. Should such salt appear to be in excess by 25 per cent., or one-fourth of the quantity stated by the applicant, the public Officer, if of the Department of Customs, shall cause the salt to be weighed, or if a Revenue or Police official, shall detain the salt, and give notice to the nearest Customs Officer, who shall cause the salt to be transported to the nearest Customs open post, and there have it weighed.

7. If on weighment, such salt shall prove to be more than 25 per cent. in excess of the quantity for which application was made, double duty shall be levied on the whole excess, and should the owner refuse, or within one month from date of weighment fail to pay such double duty, application shall by the Customs officials be made in due course to the Commissioner of Revenue for permission to confiscate the whole despatch and its carriage.

8. When double duty is levied and paid, one moiety of the duty so levied shall be credited to Government. The remaining moiety shall be divided equally between the Customs official who weighed and the official who detained the salt, or where Customs officials alone are in question shall be divided in the following manner, viz. :—

To the Customs official who weighed the salt, one-half.

To the other Customs officials concerned, the remainder, in proportion rateable to salary.

9. Where confiscation ensues, the property shall be disposed of in accordance with the ordinary rules of the department, and the proceeds shall remain in deposit for three months from the date of the order of the Commissioner of Revenue sanctioning confiscation. If, at the expiry of the above-mentioned period of three months, no notice of appeal is received from the Commissioner of Revenue, the Government duty, at the rate of one rupee eight annas per maund, shall be deducted for the quantity in excess, and the remainder be divided among the officials entitled to share on the principle laid down in Rule 8.

10. When double duty has been paid, or when salt confiscated is sold by a Customs Officer in charge of an open post, the sum to which Government is entitled as duty shall, by the Collector of Customs, be carried to credit in the usual manner and with all formalities now in use. The Officer in charge of the open post may grant to the payer of double duty, or to the purchaser of the confiscated salt a certificate, in the form now in use in the department, for such period within a maximum of six weeks, as will, in his judgment, suffice to enable the owner to dispose of his merchandize.

11. No search of a dwelling-house, or other enclosed place, shall, in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, be made under Act XXXVI of 1855, unless the Customs official who conducts the search shall have reason to believe that the salt stored is in excess of three maunds.

12. On all points not especially mentioned in these rules, the ordinary rules of the Department of Customs will remain in force.

The undermentioned correspondence regarding the allowances of Military Officers in staff employ during absence on preparatory leave :—

From the Accountant General, Bengal, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Financial Department,—No. E 1702, dated 9th September 1868.

I have the honor, by direction of the Accountant General, to observe that the new rules for the grant of leave to Military Officers are silent as to the rate of allowance to be paid to Officers on preparatory leave under Section XVIII; considering, however, that that description of leave is analogous to general leave taken in India, this Office has in three cases passed to Officers proceeding on the former leave full Military pay and allowances and half staff salary, I am to beg the favor of being informed whether this procedure has the sanction of Government.

No. 2560, dated 18th September 1868.

Endorsed by the Finl. Dept.

Forwarded to the Military Department for opinion.

Office Memo. from Military Department, to Secretary to Government of India, Financial Department,—No. 216, dated 12th October 1868.

In returning the enclosure of docket No. 2560, dated 18th September 1868, the undersigned is directed to inform the Financial Department that the allowances of an Officer taking leave preparatory to furlough have always been regulated on the principle applying to general leave, that is, an Officer is entitled during such leave to the staff Corps pay of his rank and a moiety of his staff salary.

2. The proceeding of the Examiner of Claims appears therefore to have been correct.

ORDERED, that the above-mentioned correspondence be published in the Gazette of India, and communicated to the Comptroller General of Accounts, the Accountants General at Madras, Bombay, the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and British Burmah; and to the Deputy Accountants General in the Central Provinces, Hyderabad, and Mysore.

No. 982 of 1868.—His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council is pleased to direct, in accordance with Clause 79 of Army Circulars of 1868, dated War Office, 1st August 1868, that the words within one year of such discharge to complete a total period of twenty-one or twenty-four years' service, in paragraph 7 of Clause 49 of Army Circulars of 1867, published in Government General Order No. 1081, dated 21st November 1867, be cancelled.

No. 983 of 1868.—With reference to Government General Order No. 442, dated 29th April 1868, His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council is pleased to declare the provisions of the following Clause of Army Circulars of 1868, dated War Office, 1st August 1868, applicable to India to the same extent as the previous circular:—

Wages of hospital servants on boardship, Clause 82.

1. All claims for wages of hospital servants employed on board vessels conveying troops to this country from abroad, will in future be settled by the Principal Purveyor at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley. Such claims will accordingly be transmitted to the Officer in question for adjustment.

2. The claim will be prepared on War Office Form 172, and the names, rank of each man, and the nature and period of employment carefully entered, whether he belong to the permanent hospital staff or not.

3. The following information is necessary before any claim can be considered, and will therefore be sent in with it:—

(A).—A certificate from the Medical Officer in charge that the servants were actually and necessarily employed in attendance on sick soldiers, an additional certificate being added in the case of special orderlies (in conformity with the rule laid down in Article 216 of the Purveyor's Regulations) when the orderlies exceed ten per cent. of the sick in hospital.

(B).—A certificate from the Officer Commanding that the men did not receive free rations during the voyage.

(C.)—A certificate from the Medical Officer showing the average number of sick daily under treatment and in hospital during the voyage.

4. In the case of a voyage from this country, the claim will, on termination of the voyage, be submitted by the Medical Officer in charge for the approval of the Principal Medical Officer at the foreign station.

5. The Principal Medical Officer will, if he approve the claim, forward it to the General or other Officer Commanding to authorize the issue of the amount due.

6. The same information as would be required for the adjustment of claims at Netley (see paragraphs 2 and 3 above) will be furnished with the claims at foreign stations.

7. Clause 74, Army Circulars, 1867, is hereby cancelled as far as it relates to acting Hospital Sergeants and acting or temporary Orderlies.

Preamble.

Whereas it is expedient to define and amend the law relating to certain matters connected with the tenancy of land in the Panjáb; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.—Preliminary.

Short title. Extent of Act.

1. This Act may be called "The Panjáb Tenancy Act, 1868," and shall extend only to the territories for the time being under the government of the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb.

Saving of decrees and of agreements between landlords and tenants.

2. Nothing contained in this Act shall affect the operation of any decree of Court under which a tenant holds or of any agreement between a landlord and a tenant, when such agreement is in writing or recorded by the proper officer in the record of a regular settlement sanctioned by the Local Government.

All entries in such record in respect of matters comprised in Chapters III, IV, V and VI of this Act shall, when attested by the proper officer, be deemed to be agreements within the meaning of this section.

Interpretation clause.

3. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—

"Land." "Land" means immoveable property for the time being subject to a settlement, whether regular or summary, of land-revenue;

"Rent." "Rent" means whatever is payable by an occupant of land on account of the use or occupation thereof;

"Arrear of rent." Any instalment of rent which is not paid on or before the day when the same becomes due, whether under a written agreement or according to law or local usage, shall be deemed to be, for the purposes of this Act, an arrear of rent;

"Tenant." "Tenant" means any occupant of land liable to pay rent therefor, but does not include an under-proprietor;

"Landlord." "Landlord" means any person entitled to receive rent payable by a tenant.

"Grand-father," "uncle," and "grand-uncle." "Grand-father" includes the father of an adoptive father, "uncle" the brother of an adoptive father, and "grand-uncle" the adoptive father of an uncle;

"Representative." "Representative" means an heir or any other person taking by operation of law or by will a beneficial interest in the property of a deceased person.

Repeal of Book Circular No. 33 of 1860.

4. The Book Circular of the Financial Commissioner of the Panjáb, No. 33 of 1860, is hereby repealed.

CHAPTER II.—Of Rights of Occupancy.

Tenants having right of occupancy.

5. Every tenant who—

(1) has heretofore paid no rent and rendered no service, in respect of the land occupied by him, to the proprietor thereof for the time being, beyond the amount of land-revenue and village-cesses for the time being chargeable thereon, and whose father and grandfather, uncle and grand-uncle occupying the same land, have paid no rent and rendered no service in respect thereof to such proprietor, beyond the amount aforesaid.

(2) or who has involuntarily parted or shall involuntarily part with proprietary rights in any land otherwise than by forfeiture to Government; and who has continuously occupied or shall continuously occupy such land or any part thereof from the time of such parting;

(3) or who is at the date of passing this Act the representative of a person who settled as a cultivator in the village in which the land occupied by such tenant is situate along with the founders of the village;

(4) or who is or has been jágírdár of the village or any part of the village in which the land occupied by him as tenant is situate, and who has continuously occupied such land for not less than twenty years—shall be deemed to have a right of occupancy in the land so occupied.

Presumption arising from entry in settlement record.

6. Every tenant whose name appears in the records of a regular or revised settlement heretofore sanctioned by the Local Government, as having a right of occupancy in land which he or the person from whom he has immediately inherited has continuously occupied from the entry of his name or the name of such person (as the case may be) in such settlement, shall be presumed to have a right of occupancy in the land so occupied,

Rebuttal of presumption.

unless the landlord shall in a regular suit prove—

(1) that within the thirty years immediately before the institution of such suit other tenants of the same class in the same or in adjacent villages have ordinarily been ejected from their holdings at the will of the landlord; or

(2) that the tenant has voluntarily admitted before any officer employed in making or revising a regular settlement of land revenue or before any officer authorized to attest the entries in the record of such settlement, that he is a tenant not having a right of occupancy, and that such admission has been recorded at the time by the officer so employed or authorized.

Right of occupancy in land taken in exchange.

7. If the tenant has voluntarily exchanged the land, or any portion of the land, formerly occupied by him for other land belonging to the same landlord, the land taken in exchange shall, for the purposes of this Act, be held to be subject to the same right of occupancy as the land given in exchange would have been subject to if the exchange had not taken place.

Suits to establish rights of occupancy on other grounds.

8. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to preclude any person claiming a right of occupancy on any ground other than the grounds hereinbefore specified from suing to establish such right.

Non-acquisition of right of occupancy by lapse of time.

9. No tenant shall be deemed to acquire a right of occupancy by mere lapse of time.

And no right of occupancy in the common lands belonging to a pattídári village-community shall be acquired under this Chapter.

CHAPTER III.—Of Rent.

1.—Enhancement.

Decree for enhancement of Rent.

10. No tenant shall, in the absence of an agreement or decree of Court to the contrary effect, be held liable, in a suit for arrears of rent in [illegible] any land, to pay rent exceeding in amount [illegible] rent payable by him in respect of such la[illegible] the last preceding agricultural year, unless a decree for the enhancement of the rent has been made as hereinafter provided.

The said Lieutenant Governor shall have power, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, to declare for all or any of the Districts under his government the day on which the agricultural year shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to commence.

Grounds of enhancement.

11. The Court may decree that the rent previously payable by any tenant having a right of occupancy may be enhanced on any of the following grounds:—

1st Ground.—That the quantity of land held by him as tenant exceeds the quantity for which he has previously been liable to pay rent.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall decree rent for the land in excess at the same rate as that payable in respect of the land of a similar description and with similar advantages held by him of the same landlord.

2nd Ground.—That the rate of rent paid by him is below the rate of rent usually paid in the same or adjoining villages by the same class of tenants having a right of occupancy for land of a similar description and with similar advantages.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall enhance his rent to the amount claimed by the plaintiff not exceeding such rate.

3rd Ground.—That the rate of rent paid by him is, if he belong to the class described in clause 1 of section five, more than fifty per centum,

if he belong to any of the classes specified in clause 2, 3 or 4 of section five, more than thirty per centum, and if he belong to the class specified in section six, more than fifteen per centum, below the rate of rent usually paid in the neighbourhood by tenants of the same class not having a right of occupancy for land of a similar description and with similar advantages.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall enhance his rent to the amount claimed by the plaintiff not exceeding such rate, less fifty per centum, thirty per centum or fifteen per centum, as the case may be.

Enhancement when tenant pays revenue or cesses.

12. If the revenue or any of the village-cesses is payable by the defendant, the rate to which his rent may be enhanced shall be reduced by the amount so payable.

Suit for re-enhancement.

13. After a decree has been passed under section ten, no suit shall lie against the defendant for re-enhancement of his rent until the expiration of five years from the date of such decree, unless in the mean time there has taken place a general revision of regular settlement, under which the revenue payable for the land comprised in the decree has been increased.

2.—Abatement.

Grounds of right to abatement.

14. Every tenant having a right of occupancy shall be entitled to claim abatement of the rent previously paid by him on either of the following grounds, and on no others:—

(1) that the area of the land in his occupation has been diminished by diluvion or otherwise, or proved to be less than the quantity for which rent has been previously paid by him; or

(2) that the productive powers of such land have been decreased by any cause beyond his control.

3.—Remission.

When Court may allow remission from rent.

15. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, it shall be lawful for the Court, in making a decree for an arrear of rent, if the area of the land in the tenant's occupation has been diminished by diluvion or otherwise, or if the produce of such land has been diminished by drought or hail, or other calamity beyond his control, to such an extent that the full amount of rent payable by him cannot, in the opinion of the Court, be equitably decreed, to allow such remission from the rent payable by him as may appear equitable:

Provided that if the tenant hold a lease for an unexpired term of not less than five years, or have a right of occupancy, in a revenue-paying estate, no such remission shall be allowed to him, unless a remission of revenue has been allowed on the same ground and by competent authority in respect of the same estate.

4.—Rent in Kind.

Commutation of rent in kind.

16. No commutation of rent in kind into rent in money, and no commutation of rent in money into rent in kind, shall take place without the consent of both the landlord and the tenant.

Division and appraisement of produce taken for rent.

17. Whenever rent is taken by division of the produce in kind, or by estimate or appraisement of the standing crop, or other procedure of a similar nature, requiring the presence of the person entitled to the rent and of the cultivator, either personally or by their recognized agents, if either party neglects to be present at the proper period, or if a dispute arises between the parties regarding such division, estimate or appraisement, either party may present an application to the Court, on a paper bearing a stamp of eight annas, requesting that the proper person be deputed to make the division, estimate or appraisement.

Procedure in case of dispute.

18. On receiving such application and such sum, to be paid in the first instance by the applicant, as the Court thinks sufficient to defray the costs of serving the notice and making the award next hereinafter mentioned, the Court shall issue a written notice to the other party requiring him to attend on the date and at the place specified in the notice, and shall depute a proper person to make the division, estimate or appraisement and to direct by whom the costs of each party are to be paid.

The award of such person in respect of the said division, estimate or appraisement and costs shall be final, unless within three months from the date thereof either party institutes a suit to set it aside.

CHAPTER IV.—Of Ejectment.

Ejectment of tenant with right of occupancy

19. No tenant having a right of occupancy in any land shall be ejected therefrom otherwise than in execution of a decree.

Such decree shall not be made, unless

(1) at the date of the decree, a decree against such tenant for an arrear of rent in respect of such land has remained unsatisfied for fifteen days or upwards; or

(2) the landlord tenders to the tenant, in addition to any compensation to which he may be entitled under sections twenty-seven and thirty-seven (but subject to deduction in respect of the arrears of rent, if any, payable by him), such compensation as the Court thinks fit, not less than fifteen, and not more than thirty, times the amount of the net annual profits receivable by the tenant in respect of such land on an average of the three years next before the date of the tender.

Nothing in the last preceding clause shall be deemed to apply to a tenant belonging to any of the classes specified in section five, or to a tenant when he, or the person from whom he has inherited, has continuously occupied such land for thirty years or upwards.

Ejectment of tenant without right of occupancy.

20. A tenant not having a right of occupancy may be ejected—first, if a decree has been obtained against him for arrears of rent or for ejectment; or second, when he is not holding under an unexpired lease, or an agreement, or a decree of Court, by notice given by the landlord in manner hereinafter mentioned.

Time of ejectment.

21. Notwithstanding anything herein contained, no tenant shall be ejected from the land in his occupation, except between the fifteenth day of April and the fifteenth day of June, unless while the rent in respect of such land is in arrear, he has failed to cultivate the land in accordance with the terms on which he holds it.

Notice of Ejectment.

Notice of ejectment.

22. The notice of ejectment shall be written in the vernacular language of the district: it shall specify the lands from which the tenant is to be ejected; and it shall inform him that, if he means to dispute the ejectment, he must institute a suit for that purpose on or before the fifteenth day of May next after the service of the notice, or quit the land on or before that date.

The said Lieutenant Governor shall determine what, for the purposes of this section, shall be deemed to be the vernacular language of each District in the territories under his government.

Service of notice.

23. On the landlord's application and occupancy Tahsildár or other officer [illegible] to serve such notice [illegible] notice shall be served by him on or before [illegible] fifteenth day of April, and the landlord shall pay the costs of service.

The notice shall, if practicable, be served personally on the tenant.

But if he cannot be found, service may be made by affixing the notice at his usual place of residence, or, if he does not reside in the district wherein the land is situate, at some conspicuous place in the village wherein the land is situate.

Power to alter dates for suing to dispute, and for serving notice of, ejectment.

24. The said Lieutenant Governor shall have power, from time to time, by notification published in the official Gazette not less than six months before such notification is to come into force, to fix, for the purposes of sections twenty-two and twenty-three, in all or any of the Districts under his government, any two days other than the days fixed in the same sections:

Provided that between the days so fixed by notification, there shall be an interval of at least one month.

Cessation of tenancy on failure to contest notice.

25. If the tenant on whom such notice of ejectment has been served fails to institute, on or before the fifteenth day of May next after the service, or, in case the said Lieutenant Governor fixes for the purpose of section twenty-two any day other than the said fifteenth day of May, then on or before the day so fixed, a suit to contest his liability to be ejected, his tenancy of the land in respect of which the notice has been served shall be held to cease on that day.

Assistance to eject.

When assistance to eject may be given by Court

26. If no such suit be brought, or if such suit be brought and dismissed, and the landlord require the assistance of the Court to eject any person whose tenancy is alleged to have ceased under the provisions of section twenty-two, he may apply for such assistance; and if the Court be satisfied that notice of ejectment was duly served on such person, it shall, subject to the provisions of section nineteen, give such assistance accordingly.

Nothing done by the Court under this section shall affect the right of any tenant to institute a suit against his landlord on account of illegal ejectment, and to recover compensation for the same.

Growing Crops.

Compensation to ejected tenant for growing crops.

27. Any tenant ejected in accordance with the provisions of this Act, shall be entitled to receive from the landlord the value of any growing crops or other ungathered products of the earth belonging to such tenant and being on the land at the time of the ejectment:

Provided that if the land has been sown or planted by the tenant after the service on him of the notice mentioned in section twenty, he shall not be so entitled, unless, after such service, the landlord has expressly authorized him to continue to occupy the land.

CHAPTER [illegible] — OF RELINQUISHMENT, LEASES AND UNDER-LEASES, ALIENATION AND SUCCESSION.

Relinquishment of land by tenant.

28. Every tenant shall be liable to pay the rent payable in respect of the land in his occupation for the ensuing agricultural year, unless, on or before the first day of January next before the commencement of that year, he gives notice to the landlord of his intention to relinquish such land before the commencement of such year, and relinquishes it accordingly, or unless the land has been let to any other person by the landlord.

Power to fix commencement of agricultural year for purposes of section 28.

29. The said Lieutenant Governor shall have power, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, to declare, for all or any of the Districts under his government, the day on which the agricultural year shall, for the purposes of section twenty-eight be deemed to commence, and, in lieu of the said first day of January, to substitute, for the purposes of section twenty-eight, in all or any of the same Districts, such day as he thinks fit.

Discharge of tenant.

30. If the tenant relinquishes the land according to his said notice, he shall be discharged from all liability to pay the rent which would otherwise have accrued due in respect of such land after the date of the relinquishment.

Refusal to receive notice.

31. If the landlord or his recognized agent refuse to receive such notice, he tenant may apply to the tahsíldár or proper officer, and ritten notice shall thereupon be served by him on such landlord or agent, and the tenant shall pay the costs of service.

The notice shall, if practicable, be served personally on the landlord or agent.

But if he cannot be found, service may be made by affixing the notice at his usual place of residence, or, if he does not reside in the district wherein the land is situate, at some conspicuous place in the village wherein the land is situate.

2.—Leases and Under-leases.

Right to let or under-let.

32. Every tenant having a right of occupancy may let or under-let the land in his occupation or any part thereof:

Saving of agreements not to let or sub-let.

Provided that nothing in the former part of this section shall be deemed to affect any agreement on the part of a lessee that he will not, or will not without the previous consent of the lessor or his representative, unde·let or part with the possession of the said la.d or any portion thereof.

Liability of lessee and under-lessee.

33. Every person to whom land is let or under-let under section thirty-two shall in respect of such land, and so far as regards the landlord and his representative, be subject to all the liabilities under this Act to which the lessor or under-lessor would have been subject in respect of such land, and so far as regards such landlord and his representative, in case the lease or under-lease had not been made.

3.—Alienation.

Right of tenant to alienate.

34. Any tenant having a right of occupancy claimable in accordance with the terms of any of the clauses of section five, may alienate the land in his occupation, or any part thereof:

Landlord's right of pre-emption.

Provided that in every such case the land or part aforesaid shall be offered for sale in the first instance to the landlord at the market-value, and shall not be alienated to any other person unless the landlord shall, for the space of one month, refuse or neglect to complete the purchase.

Every other tenant may alienate the land in his occupation, or any part thereof, with his landlord's previous consent, but not otherwise.

Rights and liabilities of tenant's alienee.

35. Every person other than the landlord, to whom land is alienated under section thirty-four, shall, in respect of such land, have the same rights and be subject to the same liabilities as the tenant making the alienation.

Succession to right of occupancy.

36. When a tenant having a right of occupancy in any land dies his right shall devolve on his male lineal descendants (if any), and, failing such descendants, the right shall go to his male collateral relatives: provided that the common ancestor of the deceased and his said relatives shall have occupied such land.

As among descendants and collateral relatives claiming under this section, such right shall devolve and go as if it were land left by the deceased in the village in which such land is situate.

CHAPTER VI.—Of Compensation for Tenants' Improvements.

Tenant's right to compensation for improvements.

37. If any tenant, or, in the case of a tenant with a right of occupancy, the person from whom he has inherited, makes any such improvements on the land in his occupation as are hereinafter mentioned, the rent payable by him or his representative in respect of such land shall not be enhanced, nor shall he or his representative be ejected from the same land, unless and until he or his representative, as the case may be, has received compensation for the money or labour, or both, expended in making such improvements by him, or the person from whom he has inherited, or whom he represents, within thirty years next before the date of such enhancement or ejectment.

"Improvements" defined.

38. The word "improvements," as used in section thirty-seven, means works by which the annual letting-value of the land has been, and at the time of demanding compensation, continues to be, increased, and shall comprise—

1st, the construction of works for the storage of water, for the supply of water for agricultural purposes, for drainage, and for protection against floods; the construction of wells, the reclaiming and clearing of waste lands and other works of a like nature;

2nd, the renewal or reconstruction of any of the foregoing works, or such alterations therein, or additions thereto, as are not required for maintaining the same, and which increase durably their value.

Compensation how made.

39. Such compensation may, at the option of the landlord or his representative, be made—

(1) by payment in money;

(2) by the grant of a beneficial lease of the land by the landlord or his representative to the tenant or his representative; or

(3) partly by payment in money, and partly by the grant of such lease as aforesaid.

Provision for difference as to amount or value of compensation.

40. In case of difference as to the amount or value of the compensation tendered, either party may present an application to the Court on a paper bearing a stamp of eight annas, stating the matter in dispute, and requesting a determination thereof.

Notice of such application shall be served on the other party by the proper officer, and the applicant shall pay the costs of service.

On receiving such application, the Court shall, after taking such evidence as the parties or either of them may adduce, and after making such further enquiry (if any) as it may deem necessary, shall determine (as the case may be) the amount of the payment, or the terms of the lease, or both:

Provided that, in determining such amount or value, the Court shall take into account any assistance given by the landlord, either directly by money, material or labour at the time of making such improvements, or indirectly by subsequently allowing the tenant to hold at a rate of rent more favourable than the rate at which he otherwise would have held.

Tender of lease for twenty years to bar right to claim compensation.

41. If in any case a landlord tenders to a tenant a lease of the land in his occupation, for a term of not less than twenty years from the date of the tender, at the annual rent then paid by the tenant, or at such other annual rent as may be agreed upon, such tender, if accepted by the tenant, shall bar any claim by him or his representative in respect of improvements previously made on such land by the tenant or the person from whom he has inherited.

CHAPTER VII.—Of Procedure.

Civil Courts to hear cases under certain sections.

42. Cases cognizable under sections five, six, eleven, fourteen, nineteen, twenty and twenty-five, shall, unless otherwise provided for by any law for the time being in force, and subject to the provisions of section twenty-one of Act No. XIX of 1865 (to define the jurisdiction of the Courts of judicature of the Pánjáb and its dependencies), be heard in the Civil Courts other than the Courts of Small Causes, unless when such Courts of Small Causes shall have been specially empowered by the Local Government, under Act No. XI of 1865, section six, to hear such cases.

Applications under certain sections to be proceedings on Revenue side.

Applications under sections seventeen, twenty-three, twenty-six, and thirty-one shall be deemed to be proceedings on the Revenue side: they shall be subject to the rules of procedure for the time being in force in such cases; and all orders on such applications shall be appealable to the Financial Commissioner of the Panjáb.

Stamp on certain plaints.

43. The plaint in every suit under sections five, six, eleven, fourteen and twenty-five, shall bear a stamp of eight annas.

Saving of procedure for recovery of rent.

44. The procedure now in force in the Panjáb for the recovery of rent shall, except in so far as it is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, continue to be in force.

Confirmation of proceedings of settlement officers.

45. All proceedings of officers of Government in making or revising, prior to the passing of this Act, settlements of land-revenue shall, so far as such proceedings are consistent with the provisions of this Act, and subject to appeal and revision when an appeal or a revision is provided, be deemed to have been taken in accordance with law.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Simla on Monday, the 19th October 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, presiding.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.
The Hon'ble G. N. Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. S. Maine.
The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S I.
The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C.B.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.
The Hon'ble Sir George Couper, Bart., C.B.

EXEMPTION FROM REGISTRATION BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL moved that the report of the Select Committee on the Bill to exempt certain instruments from the Indian Registration Act, 1866, be taken into consideration. He said that, when this Bill was last before the Council, he had noticed what might be deemed to be the principal objection to it, that it would have the effect of disturbing that continuity of the record of interests in immoveable property which the Registration Act especially aimed at providing, and he had expressed the hope that this objection might be met by the insertion in the Bill of a provision for securing the transmission to the registering officer of copies of all exempted documents, with a view to their being recorded in the Registration Office in the same manner as memoranda of decrees of the Civil Court.

The Local Governments were consulted as to the effect of such a provision, and in reply, the Government of the North-Western Provinces raised strong objections to the proposal in regard to settlement records, on the ground of the expense which would have to be incurred in the preparation of copies of those records, and the uselessness of their being recorded in the Registration Office, inasmuch as they were already sufficiently available for inspection by the public.

As this ground of objection would apply equally to the documents specified in the second and third clauses of the schedule, provision had been made in the new section 3 of the Bill for the transmission to the Registration Office of the documents specified in clause 4 of the schedule only, and to secure the certainty of the other exempted documents being made available for inspection by the public, provision had been made in section 2 for persons who might desire information in regard to the subject-matter of such documents, obtaining the same facility of access thereto as they would have enjoyed had the documents been regularly registered or placed on record in the Registration Office.

At the instance of the Governments of Bombay and Madras, the words "maps" and "inám title deeds" have been inserted in the 2nd and 4th clauses of the schedule, respectively.

In the second clause also a distinction had been drawn between general surveys to documents connected with which the exemption was intended to apply, and the mere survey of waste lands which preceded their demarcation and allotment to purchasers. It was not desirable to exempt from registration documents connected with the latter class of surveys.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL then moved that the Bill be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

PANJAB TENANCY BILL.

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE moved that the final Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law relating to the tenancy of land in the Panjáb, together with the Bill as amended by them, be taken into consideration. He said that the previous history of this Bill would be in the recollection of this Council. For particulars it would suffice to refer to the proceedings of the Council of the 17th January and the 11th April last.

On the last-mentioned date, that is, the 11th April, he obtained leave to refer the Bill to a Select Committee. On the 15th July he presented the preliminary Report of that Committee, together with an amended Draft Bill, and obtained permission to refer the same to the Local Government and to the judicial authorities of the Panjáb. On the 8th October he presented the final Report of the Committee with a Bill reconsidered and amended after receipt of replies from the Panjáb. And he now moved that this report be taken into consideration with a view to the Bill being passed without amendment, or with such amendment as might to His Excellency the President and to the majority of the Council seem fit.

The report now in the hands of the Council was explicit as to the alterations in, or additions to, the original Bill, as proposed by the Committee. He would therefore not recapitulate these, but would merely state the reasons which have actuated the Committee in respect to some of the more important of their recommendations.

The Council would see that the Bill was divided into seven Chapte[illegible] Preliminary; II., Rights of Occupancy; III., Rent; IV., Ejectment; V., [illegible]quishment, leases, alienation, succession; VI., Compensation for tenan[illegible] [illegible]n-provements; VII., Procedure.

In the preliminary chapter, the most important point was this: the Committee provided in Section 2 for the strict upholding of all agreements between landlord and tenant, when such should have been separately executed, or else recorded by the Settlement Officer. But then the question arose, what was an agreement recorded by a Settlement Officer? In practice, these agreements being very numerous, were not separately recorded, but were usually entered in a general statement or schedule for each village, which important document was attested item by item by a responsible official, and signed by the parties or their representatives either by signature or mark. Such entries, though not supported by separate documents, were nevertheless truly and really agreements. Still, unless some specification were added, the Committee feared lest there might be doubt hereafter as to whether these entries were agreements within the meaning of the Act.

Therefore they proceeded to lay down that such entries, when duly attested, should be held to be agreements within the scope of this section. This was necessary to guard the tenant-rights secured by the Settlement records.

In Chapter II., relating to occupancy rights, the 5th and 6th Sections were in some respects, the most important in the whole Bill; for these defined the status of an occupancy-tenant, and these were intended to answer the primary question as to who were the tenants to be deemed to possess rights of occupancy. Now, the original Bill, as prepared by Mr. E. Brandreth, late a Member of this Council, and then in charge of the measure, described occupancy-tenants mainly as those who had been declared to be such in the Settlement records. When this was first referred to the Panjáb authorities in February last, this definition was considered to be not sufficiently complete or accurate. So this particular definition was proposed to be modified, and certain other definitions were proposed to be added. Now, after the best consideration which the Committee were able to give, they had adopted most of the additional definitions with certain simplications, but they had retained in its essentials the original definition.

The result was that the Committee had been obliged to classify the occupancy tenants into five categories: the first four categories comprised various superior classes of tenants, and the fifth comprised those who had been so recorded at the Settlement. The fifth, however, was the most important, and really embraced the other four, inasmuch as all the superior classes of tenants were undoubtedly recorded at the Settlement as occupancy-tenants. It would, therefore, suffice to notice briefly the reasons why the validity of the Settlement record had been so carefully upheld in Section 6. This section laid down that a tenant recorded at the Settlement as having a right of occupancy should be presumed to have that right, unless the landlord could rebut that presumption by a regular suit on particular grounds. But then these grounds of rebuttal were strictly limited to circumstances which would prove an actual error in the record. And the practical effect must be that the Settlement record was for the most part to be declared valid by law. Now, what were the grounds for conceding by legislation such validity to the record?

It were needless to dwell on the vast efforts put forth by the Panjáb Government to make that record a really good registration of landed tenures, on the liberal expense incurred, on the experience of the officers engaged in supervision, on the scale of establishments allowed, on the years devoted to the enquiry, on the patient frequency of revision so as to ensure ultimate accuracy. With all this, there was no doubt that mistakes occurred, although, on the whole, the record was, as might have been expected, an admirable one. But in respect to tenant-right, there was probably as little mixture of mistake as in any respect; for, in this particular, there was a clear rule to go by. The Settlement Officers understood that in regard to occupancy-right, they were to look to incidents and circumstances, and quality of tenure, to local custom, and the like. But failing the ascertainment of this, they were, unless there should be reason to the contrary, to regard a tenant who had been in possession twelve years and upwards, as entitled to right of occupancy.

On what reason then was this twelve years' rule founded? In his speech before this Council on 11th April last, he, Sir R. TEMPLE, showed the uncertainty which hung round all rights, superior or inferior, in land during the period which preceded the introduction of British rule into the Panjáb. If the rights of tenants were weak, so were the rights of landlords. If there were indications which justified the confirmation of proprietary right to the proprietors, there was exactly similar justification for confirming the occupancy-right of the better classes of tenants. If the traces of tenant-right were often dubious, or for a time obscured, the same remark applied to the proprietors. The Sikh government used to treat the proprietor and the cultivator much in the same way. Though acknowledging the existence of proprietorship in the abstract, the Sikhs used to look to the occupant—to the man in possession. On him was cast the then heavy fiscal burden. On him devolved the real labour of management. Thus it happened that, under Sikh rule, all good tenants used to be treated much as under-proprietors, and inasmuch as the burden was so severe, such a mode of dealing was considered as convenient by the proprietor. It was, therefore, deemed but just that, while unprecedented security was afforded to the proprietors, something of the same sort should be secured to the better classes of tenants. Certainly such tenant-right was not opposed to custom: there was no lex loci against it; the presumption, indeed, was in favour of such right, according to the circumstances of the Panjáb. But local custom, though often traceable, was seldom quite proveable, or was not absolutely ascertainable. If that were to be the sole guide, the opinions of no two officers would agree: in no two districts would the result be similar. In one place there would be a tendency to award occupancy-rights to too many, in another place to too few. It was essential that a line should be drawn somewhere by some better criterion. Under such circumstances, it was inevitable that regard should be largely had to possession and to period of occupancy, which things could certainly be ascertained, and about which there could not be much mistake. Then, if a period of qualifying possession was to be assumed, what was that period to be? Why, the analogy of the older Regulation Provinces was followed, and a period of twelve years was assumed. That was a period well known all over the great Presidency to which the Panjáb was annexed; it had been observed in Courts of Justice since the earliest period of British rule in Northern India; it had been embodied in all directions to the land, revenue authorities; it was understood by the people of the Provinces adjoining the Panjáb.

If then the majority of occupancy-tenants had that position awarded to them at the Settlement by reason of twelve years' possession, that reason was a good one: that rule was per se a reasonable one. About this fact of possession there was little or no error. According to this test at least, nearly all the occupancy-tenants were recorded correctly enough without any mistake in fact whatever. The mistakes alleged against the records chiefly related to custom—a thing which, though existing more or less, was yet peculiarly vague at that time in most parts of the Panjáb, and in regard to which it would have been nearly impossible to say what was correctness and what incorrectness.

Moreover, according to the general sense of the people just emerging from troubled, harassed, and even revolutionary times, a period of twelve years' possession did give a man some claim. The proprietors not only refrained from objection, not only consented, but were positively willing and often desirous that claims thus supported should be recognized and recorded. They then thought it for their best interests that this should be done as tending to organize a staff of tenants who would be the mainstay of the lands in future troubles. They might, indeed, think differently now after the lapse of half a generation, when they saw the value of land rising fast, when they found that the troubles of the past were happily averted, and were not likely to recur under British administration. But a change, real or fancied, in their interest, could not justify the setting aside of agreements deliberately and formally made at that time of Settlement.

Thus it came about that occupancy-rights were recognized as belonging to, or were judicially awarded to many thousands of tenants in the Panjáb. The settlement was made before the people, and was thoroughly known to all parties. It was afterwards confirmed by the Government, and that confirmation was publicly notified. Since the completion of the settlement, years had elapsed, in some districts fifteen, in others ten, and so on. Thus there were thousands of tenants who had been at least twelve years in possession before the settlement, who had then been told by authority that they were occupancy-tenants, and who had been ten or fifteen years in possession since; in all, for nearly one generation. It was too late now to interfere with such tenures, or to deliberate whether the settlement was right or not (though, indeed, there was every reason for supposing that it was right). And these cases, though strong enough, were the comparatively weaker ones. Many cases were far stronger, as the men had more than twelve years' possession, or had something in the shape of custom, if not actually full custom, in their favour.

Various proposals, from first to last, had come before the Committee for re-examining the principles on which the settlement in this branch was made. But, on full consideration, the Committee decided to maintain the substance of Section 6 as it now stood. It was felt that any relaxation would leave the status of thousands of tenants open to dispute or to revision; and that men should not now be required to defend a position so long ago recognized, so formally guaranteed, so continuously enjoyed. Moreover, even if such enquiry were just (which it really was not), still after such a lapse of time it could not be brought to any satisfactory conclusion.

Therefore Section 6 had been framed so as to uphold the title previously recognized at the settlement as belonging to occupancy-ryots, and to narrow within strict bounds the power of rebutting this presumption.

But while pre-existing rights were fully respected in the Bill, care had been taken to avoid the creation of rights not as yet existing, and so it had been provided that, in the future, no tenant should be deemed to acquire occupancy-right by mere lapse of time. This was desirable for the sake of the landlords.

In Chapter III. relating to rent, due provision had been made in Section 11 for the enhancement of the rent, even of occupancy-tenants, on grounds specified, which grounds, if established, would go to prove that the rent might be reasonably enhanced in justice to the landlord. Herein, however, a margin of privilege and advantage had been allowed to the occupancy-tenant, that is to say, he was to pay so much less than the ordinary tenant. Further, this margin had been apportioned to the different classes of occupancy-tenants, the beneficial margin being for some classes as much as 40 and 50 per cent. of the ordinary rent, and for other classes, 15 per cent.

It had been provided by Section 10 that the rent of no tenant,—occupancy or other,—should (in the absence of agreement) be enhanced without decree of Court. But in the case of tenants-at-will, it must be remembered that the landlord could eject by notice.

The payment of rent in kind had always been known in the Panjáb; indeed, the revenue used often, under Native rule, to be paid in this manner. It was possible that applications might be made for commutation of rents in kind to rents in cash, or vice versâ. After full consideration the Committee had decided by Section 16 that, for such commutation, the consent of both landlord and tenant should be necessary.

After rent had been enhanced by decree, it was not, Section 13, to be further enhanced for five years, unless there had, in the meantime, been a revision of settlement—the object being to prevent the tenant being harassed by too frequent enhancements.

Questions of abatement seldom arose in the case of tenants-at-will. But with occupancy-tenants, these questions might arise. Therefore, in Section 14 the grounds on which alone an occupancy-tenant could claim abatement had been specified. This was desirable quite as much for the sake of the landlord as of the tenant.

In Chapter IV. relating to ejectment, it was laid down in Section 19 that an occupancy-tenant could only be ejected by decree of Court. And such an ejectment could only be decreed when either there was an unsatisfied decree for rent, or when compensation was to be tendered by the landlord. In this chapter, indeed, the most noticeable part was clause 2 of this section, wherein provision was made for the ejectment even of an occupancy-tenant on payment of compensation. He (Sir R. TEMPLE) had explained, in his speech of the 11th April last, that this provision had been introduced at the special request of the Hon'ble Sir Donald Macleod, the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjab. The grounds on which the policy and justice of this proposal must rest, were fully set forth in His Honour's Minute of the 10th February last. It would suffice to quote one brief passage from that paper:—

"My own opinion is that, while great and permanent dissatisfaction as well as serious obstruction to progress would result from declaring the occupancy of the ordinary hereditary tenant to be permanent, this principle of granting compensation on withdrawal of land, if prudently applied, would operate most beneficially and be readily accepted by nearly all. No sudden or startling change would be thus introduced. * * *. Seeing also how constant is the tendency in India to excessive sub-division, and how rapid the progress of the country promises to be in population as well as in agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial activity, it appears to me to be a matter of no small moment that the transfer of capital from agricultural to other pursuits in the more densely-peopled parts should be as much as possible facilitated."

The principle was no doubt novel to Indian practice, and there had been difference of opinion in the Committee in regard thereto. It had been retained partly in deference to the views of the Local Government, partly because there was every desire to look to the fair interest of the landlord while securing the rights of the tenant, but mainly because the plan, though new, was fair enough in regard to at least the large majority of occupancy-tenants as they were actually circumstanced in the Panjáb. Many were thus recorded at the settlement mainly by reason of a certain period of possession without any special privileges of tenure. That such persons should be bought out by compensation, seemed to be just enough, provided always that the compensation were substantial. And the Committee had taken care to provide an adequate rate of compensation. Even then, however, doubt would arise as to whether the superior classes of occupancy-tenants should be liable to be bought out. Sir D. Macleod would (as the Committee understood him) specify certain classes of these tenants as excepted from that liability. But on close examination, it had been found difficult to draw a line for this purpose between one class and another. No exception had therefore been proposed. As an amendment was likely to be proposed, or as, at all events, objections were sure to be raised in Council, it seemed sufficient for the moment to state briefly as above the reasons why this clause had been retained.

Tenants without right of occupancy might be ejected by notice from the landlord. It seemed desirable to declare the landlord's power in this respect.

Chapter V. related to relinquishment, leases, alienation and succession. In respect to leases, all tenants having a right of occupancy were to be allowed by Section 32 to let and sub-let their lands. But then by Section 33, the landlord's authority over the sub-lessee had been secured. In respect to alienation, the Committee had carefully considered how far occupancy-tenants should possess this power: the point being one on which custom was not clearly pronounced. It had been decided by Section 34 that the superior classes, described in Section 5, who were almost sub-proprietors, should have this power with merely a reservation of right of pre-emption to the landlord at the market value. All other tenants, including the occupancy-tenants of Section 6, that is, the great majority of occupancy-tenants, must obtain the landlord's consent to proposed alienation. This distinction seemed suitable to the circumstances of the occupancy-tenants in the Panjáb, and showed the caution exercised by the Committee in affirming this privilege

In this Chapter there was an important section (36) regarding the succession to occupancy-right. That such a right should devolve on direct male lineal descendants, had perhaps remained unquestioned. But the question arose as to whether, failing such heirs, the succession should go to collaterals or not. It had been decided that this should go to male collaterals. A further question arose as to whether the condition of residence in the village should be attached to such succession. A condition to this effect had been inserted in the Bill, but there was difference of opinion on this point, and probably objections would be raised in Council. At all events, the observance of the main principle of succession had been secured.

Chapter VI. related to compensation for improvements made by tenants. The provisions were simple, sufficient for the present state of things. If, from canal irrigation or other cause, a regular era of improvement should set in, further legislation would be needed in detail.

By Section 37, in the case of occupancy-tenants, if the tenant himself or the person from whom he had inherited, had made improvements on the land, then his rent was not to be enhanced, nor was he to be ejected till he had received compensation for the money and labor so expended within the previous thirty years. In the case of tenants without right of occupancy, the same rule was to apply to improvements made by the tenant himself, but not necessarily to improvements made by his father or ancestor. The question arose as to whether he should not be entitled to compensation for improvements made by his ancestor. These were held to be difficulties in making such a rule for tenants-at-will, and so the section stood. There would probably be some difference of opinion on this particular.

It had been provided in Section 41 that this compensation might be afforded by the landlord partly or wholly by a beneficial lease. This of course applied to tenants-at-will. How far a particular lease might be tantamount to the compensation, must be decided by the Court. And Section 40 provided for the determination of disputes of this nature. But if such lease should be for a term of twenty years at the annual rent paid by the tenant at the time of the offer, then such offer, if accepted by the tenant, would bar claim to compensation for improvements.

Consideration had been given as to what should constitute an improvement; and this had been defined in Section 38 to consist of works whereby the letting value of the land had been and continued to be increased. This was necessary, among other things, to guard against compensation being demanded for futile improvements. If further question arose as to the compensation, it must be decided by the Court under Section 40. No reservation had been made of the power of the landlord to take the execution of an improvement out of the hands of the tenant, and to execute it himself. In the case of occupancy-tenants, it seemed doubtful whether such power should be specially reserved to the landlord. In the case of other tenants, the landlord could always reserve such power to himself by agreement. Nor had any allusion been made to the consent of the landlord being necessarily obtained by the tenant. As regarded occupancy-tenants whose right was a species of property, there might be doubt as to the propriety of making such a provision. As regarded other tenants, if the landlord choses he could impose a restriction beforehand; but if he allowed an improvement to be made by a tenant, and had not objected, his virtual consent was inferrible. On the whole, it was good that the tenant should make improvements, and that in doing so, he should be as unfettered as possible. It was also probable that whatever improvements were made in tenant lands would be made by the tenants themselves, the landlords in the Panjáb being mostly peasant proprietors fully occupied in working their own glebes.

Chapter VII. merely adapted the procedure to the machinery and constitution of the civil administration of the Panjáb.

Such then were the principal considerations relating to this Bill: further details were given in the Committee's report. Endeavour had been made to secure what was fair both to the tenants and to the landlords.

For the protection of the tenants, the occupancy status, as defined by the settlement, had been preserved, and the engagements then entered into had been adhered to; the re-opening of questions then formally decided had been barred; the enhancement of rent, save by decree of Court, had been stopped; and even then a beneficial margin had been secured for occupancy classes: ejectment of occupancy classes, save by decree of Court, had been prevented; the right to sub-let had been reserved for all occupancy tenants, and the power of alienation had been proposed for some classes of them; the terms of succession to occupancy-rights had been declared; the grant of compensation on eviction for all improvements made by tenants, whether occupancy-tenants or other, had been carefully provided for.

On the other hand, in the just interest of the landlord, the means had been afforded for rebutting the validity of the settlement in cases where real invalidity was apparent. It had been declared that in future, no tenant should be deemed to acquire right of occupancy by mere lapse of time; the power of enhancing the rent even of occupancy-tenants had been affirmed; the grounds on which an occupancy tenant can demand abatement of rent have been limited; the right of ejecting tenants-at-will merely by notice had been declared; the consent of the landlord to alienation even by occupancy-tenants, save those of the superior classes, had been rendered necessary; even in those cases where right of alienation was allowed to the tenant, the right of the landlord to pre-emption had been reserved; the power of the landlord over the sub-lessees of his tenants had been secured; and lastly a power had been proposed for the landlord of terminating occupancy-rights by the tender of compensation.

Sir R. TEMPLE now submitted this Bill for the consideration of His Excellency the President and of the Council, with some confidence that it would stand the tests supplied even by His Excellency's vast experience. That confidence was based not only on the knowledge he (Sir R. TEMPLE) necessarily had of the people concerned in this measure, having for years pitched his tents among them, but also on the strong support and aid received from his Hon'ble Colleague Mr. Strachey, who had successfully introduced a similar Rent Bill for Oudh, on the thorough examination of principles afforded by their learned Colleague Mr. Maine, and on the care and acumen brought to bear on the drafting of the sections and clauses by the Secretary to the Council, Mr. Whitley Stokes.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE said "Sir, there is much in the Bill of my Hon'ble friend on which it will be safe for one who has not passed the greatest part of his life in India to abstain from pronouncing positively, but some questions of principle are raised by it on which I may be entitled to have an opinion. The views which I have formed on them (which happen for the moment not to be popular views), I am the more anxious to state, because, though the subject-matter of the measure has undergone much public discussion, I do not think justice has been done to the side of the questions involved to which I am compelled to incline. Before, however, I come to the merits of the Bill, it is perhaps proper I should say something on a point which was much discussed when the Bill, then in Mr. Brandreth's charge, came before your Excellency's Council. I was not in India at the time, but I see that several Members of the Legislature expressed doubts whether any legislation at all was required, and whether the law, as applied by the Settlement Officers and Civil Courts of the Panjáb, should not be suffered to take its course. The facts of the case are now much more clearly known. We have not before us the statistics of the recent Settlement for the whole province, but we have them for one Division. It appears that in the single division of Amritsar 60,000 heads of households were recorded at the first Settlement of the Panjáb as entitled to beneficial rights of occupancy. At the recent settlement, 46,000 of these cultivators have been degraded to the status of tenants-at-will. If the same proportions be maintained for the whole province, these numbers denote some hundreds of thousands. It would appear, however, from a Minute of the Chief Court of the Panjáb, that, though the Settlement Officers employed the Settlement Regulation of 1822 to produce these formidable results, they did not think fit to follow the prescribed procedure, but have adopted a procedure of their own, unknown to the law. The Chief Court states accordingly that all the settlement operations have effected is a 'superior description of registration.' But that is not all. It seems that the Settlement Officers, from compassion or compunction, did not in all cases degrade the occupancy-tenant at once to a tenancy-at-will. They allowed him a period of grace, during which he was to retain his rights of occupancy. The Chief Court has decided that they had no power to do anything of the kind, and that in such cases the higher status must continue indefinitely. Sir, I observe with regret that, during the sittings of the gentlemen who recently assembled at Murree to consider the amended Bill, an attempt was made to get some words introduced to it reflecting on this decision of the Chief Court. I do not suppose that anything I may say can add authority to the Court's opinion, but still I am bound to state that it appears to me—and what is more important, I believe it appears to your Excellency—that the Chief Court was entirely and obviously in the right, and that the functions of a Settlement Officer are confined to declaring the class of tenure to which the holding of each cultivator belongs. This decision of the Chief Court, however, in Amritsar alone, affects no less than 22,000 cases. In one division, there have been 46,000 rulings on rights to land, of which 22,000 are bad in law. We are threatened with an agrarian revolution, to be immediately followed by an agrarian counter-revolution. In such a state of things, it is probably superfluous for me to argue on the necessity for legislation, and indeed I greatly lament that the course of circumstances has prevented your Excellency's Government from stepping in earlier, and with a high hand forcing a compromise on the official disputants in the Panjáb.

And now, Sir, as to the Bill before the Council. I do not mean to oppose it. Indeed, as a Member of the Committee, I have joined unreservedly in the recommendation that it be passed. But the chief ground on which I support it is that affairs in the Panjáb have come to such a pass that no arrangement of the matters in dispute is now prudent or politic, except one in the nature of a compromise. The controversy between the officials has extended to the Natives; the fears of one class and the expectations of another have been roused, and it thus become imperative on the Government of India to avert great political evils by taking a decided course and effecting a settlement intermediate between extreme views. I further refrain from placing any impediment in the way of the Bill, because your Excellency, who certainly cannot be accused of any fanatical dislike of tenant-right, does not think that the measure as now settled by the Select Committee will inflict intolerable hardship on the large class it will affect. But, Sir, I am bound to say that but for this feeling on your Excellency's part, and but for my conviction that nothing but a compromise of some sort is now admissible, I should have the gravest doubts of the wisdom, fairness, and expediency of the Bill. I should doubt whether it did not go much too far in countenancing proceedings, which seem to me to exhibit characteristics rarely found together in India, and to combine an attack on tenant-right with an attack on the stability of the rights of property. Let me say, however, that I do not think that, properly speaking, the Bill raises the question of the expediency of tenant-right. I can quite understand two opinions being held as to the well-known rule of Act X of 1859, under which there is a perpetual creation of new tenant-rights. I can understand two opinions on the question of tenant-right as it presents itself in Ireland, and as it presented itself three years since in Oudh. But when tenant-right has once existed for a definite period of years, when it has been protected by Government and law, and when it has become vested in specific individuals, it appears to me just as much deserving of respect as any other form of property. All question of its expediency disappears, and the principles of justice and statesmanship no more admit of its violent destruction than they do of the confiscation of copyholds.

Sir, in order to explain the grounds on which I should dispute the equity and common fairness of this Bill, if I thought the question open to any arrangement except one of the sort which it proposes, I must repeat those amazing figures which I read to the Council a few moments ago. At the first Settlement of the Panjáb, 60,000 heads of agricultural households were in the single division of Amritsar recorded as having beneficial rights of occupancy in their holdings. At the present Settlement, 46,000 of these occupancy-tenants have been degraded to the position of tenants-at-will, liable to eviction and rack-rent. Sir, the exact economical position of the ryot whose tenure is one of occupancy, I take to be this. He cannot be evicted except on certain conditions, and the profits of the cultivation of the soil (independently of the share of those profits taken by the Government as revenue, and independently of the portion which represents the cost of tillage, and of the cultivator's subsistence, and the interest of whatever capital he may have embarked) are divided under varying rules of law between the occupancy-tenant and the landlord, instead of going wholly to the landlord, as in the case of a tenant-at-will. This being so, I have always held the opinion attributed to me at a recent sitting of this Council by my Hon'ble friend Mr. Strachey, that, in strictness of language, the occupancy-tenant is a co-proprietor with the landlord. Rights over land or any valuable commodity are either rights arising out of contract or proprietary rights. This distribution of rights is considered by the best jurists as exhaustive; if then the occupancy-ryot does not hold (and it is clear he does not hold) under contract, it follows that he has some sort of right of property in the land. There has, therefore, been in the district of Amritsar an attempt at a clear confiscation of property to the extent indicated by 46,000 heads of agricultural households. These 46,000 persons are, it is proposed, to be placed in the same condition as if they had merely contracted for the use of the land. Not only that. A contract may be highly beneficial; but the contract under which these ex-proprietors are to hold, either at once or ultimately, is the least beneficial of all contracts connected with land—a tenancy-at-will and at a rack-rent. If the Settlement Officers of the Panjáb are allowed to have their way—and in order to have their way, they have left no stone unturned which an Indian functionary can move—these 46,000 households will be completely dependent on the will and pleasure of others for the liberty of remaining on the land, and will pay for that liberty exactly what those others choose to demand. And taking the whole province, there must be hundreds of thousands of cultivators whose proprietary status has been similarly degraded.

Now let me trace the history of those advantages of tenure of which it is proposed to deprive these unhappy persons. First, what has been the duration of their beneficial enjoyment? Fifteen years is a fair average time to assume for the duration of the first settlement, though in some parts it has lasted considerably longer. It is conceded, and this is the very ground of objection to the first settlement, that the status then recorded corresponded with the actual facts as they existed for at least twelve years preceding. It is, therefore, a beneficial enjoyment and possession of at least a quarter of a century, and probably of a far longer period, which it is now sought to disturb. But that is not all. Sir, I say that for the last fifteen years, these rights have been enjoyed under a distinct protection and guarantee of permanency by the British Government. I commend to the attentive consideration of the Council the earlier part of the valuable Minute of the Chief Court. It is there shown that at the first settlement of the Panjáb, the officers employed did not merely, as in older Indian settlements, construct a record which was only a primâ facie description of the rights therein described. The Panjáb officers were invested with judicial powers, and the Civil Courts were carefully excluded from interference with their decisions, which when given on merits, became the decisions of Judges. Of course I do not mean to say that they adjudicated in every case. No court of justice ever adjudicates in more than the minutest fraction of the cases really, though indirectly, affected by its jurisdiction. But it is clear that everybody, landlord or tenant, had an opportunity of coming forward to assert his rights in litigious form, and had power to appeal from decisions which he thought inequitable, and every decision of the Settlement Courts must have indirectly disposed of thousands of cases not actually brought before them. I can scarcely conceive any stronger guarantee given to these rights. A Parliamentary title to property is necessarily somewhat arbitrary; but when a Government sets its courts of justice in motion for the affirmation of rights, bringing them to the very doors of claimants and opponents, it gives a moral guarantee of the highest order. These tenants, therefore, Sir, have been in possession for at least 27 years, and for 15 years of that time have enjoyed their rights under the protection not only of the British Government, but of British courts of justice. Let me now ask whether they are an idle and thriftless class, whom it is expedient to improve off the face of the earth. Sir, the evidence to the contrary, which has been laid before me, is truly astonishing. I have been told of parts of the Panjáb which were little better than a wilderness before annexation, and which now bloom like a garden, mainly through the industry of these tenants. I have heard of villages voluntarily paying more for the mere rent of irrigation-water than the whole amount of revenue, which, at the time of annexation, it was thought fair to demand from them on the part of the Government. Sir, I do not adduce the proved laboriousness of these cultivators simply by way of appeal to compassion. It constitutes my main answer to the proposition so often occurring in these papers that 'it was the British Government which introduced rights of occupancy into the Panjáb.' I do not believe the statement, and I see that the most violent partizans of the theory have now been compelled to relinquish it, for after the most stringent revision of the Amritsar Settlement 15,000 occupancy-tenants remain on the record, which is a conclusive admission of the existence of the tenure before the conquest. But suppose the statement to be true. Why should not the British Government, under the peculiar circumstances of the Panjáb, establish rights of occupancy in the tenants whom it found in the province at annexation? Who is it that has created in the Panjáb the rent of land and its value for sale or letting, which were practically unknown there under Native rule? It is partly the British Government by the peace and security which it has established—partly the cultivators by their industry. Why should the British Government not give some degree of protection to one large section of the class which, jointly with that Government, has produced all this wonderful prosperity? Why should it, on any principle of justice, be bound to place these tenant-cultivators suddenly at the mercy of any body who can make a claim to those faint, vague, and shifting proprietary rights which by general admission alone existed before the annexation?

Sir, the proposal deliberately made to us by one numerous and energetic section of the Panjáb officials is to confiscate, either immediately or after a short interval, the beneficial rights of hundreds of thousands of households, guaranteed as I have described, vested in the class I have described, and gained at the expense of nobody. But what are we to say of derivative rights which in 15 or 20 years have probably flowed from the original rights in the course of the ordinary transactions of life? As there has always been a doubt whether occupancy-tenures were alienable, they have probably not been parted with in any number, but money-lending is active in every corner of India, and undoubtedly these tenures have been the security, direct or indirect, for considerable advances of money. They may not have been expressly mortgaged, but I find from the papers of the Orissa Famine Commissioners that even in the most difficult times, an occupancy-tenant can obtain an advance when a tenant-at-will can get none. What is to become of the security for such advances? It is apparently to be destroyed together with the original rights.

Sir, I am bound to say—remembering always that I speak from an English lawyer's point of view, and subject to the reservation implied in my comparative ignorance of the necessary conditions of administration—I am bound to say that, when these proposals first became known to me, they struck me as really monstrous. Yet things primâ facie monstrous may turn out simple and natural, but we may at least expect that a strong defence will be made for them. What defence is made here? The chief, it may be said the only, reason assigned for such proposals is that mistakes were made at the first settlement, and that cultivators were recorded as having a right of occupancy, to whom the custom of the country did not attribute any such right. It will be inferred from what I have said that I decline to regard this as in any respect an answer to the tenants' claim. The true question is whether the title of the occupancy-ryots is not of such a character that it ought to prevail, even though it began in mistake,—nay, even though it began, like many of the Talukdárí tenures of Oudh, in simple violence. I consider, therefore, the allegation that mistakes were made as raising an immaterial issue. But as many estimable persons do seem to attach some degree of importance to the assertion, I may be permitted to enquire briefly on what foundation it rests. And here, Sir, let me say it was a piece of great good fortune for this Council that my Hon'ble friend, Sir R. Temple, joined us at the particular juncture in the history of this measure at which he took his seat. The impugners of the accuracy of the first settlement were very clamorous and positive; its defenders gave, it seemed to me, but an uncertain sound. But my Hon'ble friend, who had an intimate connexion with this settlement—which, I believe, most of its present critics know only by tradition—who in the Central Provinces has had proceeding under his eye a settlement conducted on precisely the same principles, was able to assure us that the imputation of carelessness or empirical precipitation was absolutely groundless, and that as much pains were taken as with any other settlement of revenue. Your Excellency is further aware that since it became known in England that these charges were being made, the Government has received letters from gentlemen who were engaged in the settlement in high positions, and who indignantly repudiate the imputations directed against their carefulness and sagacity. I have read the papers most diligently, and I find the only error worth mentioning, which is charged against the original Settlement Officers, is that they took the state of the facts existing during the 12 years previous to annexation as proof of the state of the rights. Now, Sir, with a view to ascertaining in what degree the Settlement Officers were blameable for taking this course, permit me to read a passage from a Minute of the present Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb, who, it must be recollected, is a very high authority on opinions and ideas in purely Native states of society:—'The state of things,' he says, 'existing in the Panjáb, for a long series of years preceding annexation, was such as almost to extinguish proprietary rights in land, or at all events to deprive them of mostly all their value. The people, in consequence possessed very indistinct ideas in regard to those rights, so that the best security for a correct ascertainment of the rights and relations of the several classes connected with the land was wanting.' Other authorities who have joined in this controversy have made the same admission even more strongly, so much so that it may almost be inferred from their language that, under Sikh rule, there was no such thing as eviction, and no such thing as the rent of land. Nor is this last statement as incredible as it may seem, for it may well be that the Sikh government took so much from the cultivator in the form of Revenue, that nothing, or next to nothing, was left to him but the means of subsistence and cultivation, and consequently there was nothing, or next to nothing, which could go to the landlord in the form of Rent. But what was the problem before the first Settlement Officers? To discover whether tenants were occupancy-tenants or tenants-at-will—whether they could be evicted, and their rent enhanced at pleasure—and this discovery had to be made in reference to a state of society which included neither eviction nor rent. Really, Sir, the customary mode of doing that which was never done—the customary mode of dividing the non-existent—strike one as belonging to that class of questions on which it is best to decline giving a confident opinion. Why then, when the conditions of enquiry were these, why should the Settlement Officers be condemned for preferring one of the best established principles of jurisprudence to an investigation of the 'very indistinct ideas' described by Sir D. Macleod. There is, in a memorandum recently sent up, a dictum of the Settlement Commissioner that 'the recognition of periods as tests of rights is the very mischief.' Well, Sir, the recognition of a period of time as the test of a right may in the Panjáb be called a mischief, but it is known to jurists as a prescription; and not only are prescriptions common in all systems of jurisprudence, but it so happens that the free use of prescriptions has been selected by jurists as the criterion for distinguishing good and civilized systems of law from those that are bad and barbarous. And the reason is notorious. The accumulated common sense of ages has shown that, even in societies which have very distinct ideas as to property, enquiries into rights which are unfrequently and intermittently exercised are, if carried far back, as nearly as possible worthless.

But, Sir, assuming that the adoption of the twelve year rule led to the recording of some rights which would not have been recorded if a different mode of investigation had been followed, let us see whether the officers engaged in the recent settlement had any advantage in prosecuting their enquiries over their predecessors of twenty years since. And first, Sir, I put aside the assumption which I regret to see occasionally made in the papers of superior sagacity and care in the present Settlement Officers. There is no evidence for the assumption, which at best is not very graceful; and it is probably safe to take it for granted that at both settlements all parties did their duty to the best of ther ability and up to the measure of their lights. But is it not evident, Sir, that from the very nature of the case, the present Settlement Officers were not only not at an advantage, but at a vast disadvantage, as compared with my Hon'ble friend, Sir R. Temple and his colleagues? I must again quote from the Lieutenant Governor the admission that, property having little or no value before the annexation, 'very indistinct ideas' prevailed on the subject of proprietary right. This then was the subject-matter of enquiry—a mass of 'very indistinct ideas' which were entertained on a particular subject twenty years ago. Then, Sir, the nature of these ideas had to be established by the oral testimony of very ignorant men. It is necessary, Sir, to put this clearly, for some of the papers appear to me to disclose a very curious misconception of the Settlement Officers. They seem to have supposed that what they had to enquire into was the present ideas of the people on the subject of property and tenancy. But that, Sir, cannot be. The true question was whether the first settlement of the Panjáb was at variance with local customs, and the business in hand was to take evidence of those customs as they existed before the annexation. And as to these customs, or rather ideas as to customs admitted to have been 'very indistinct,' they had to accept the oral testimony of very ignorant witnesses, and, if possible, to make that testimony prevail against a written record made very shortly after annexation. Well, Sir, it is almost a proverb in India that oral testimony is of very little value. The strongest statement I have seen on the point fell from the eminent Native Judge who sits on the Bench of the High Court at Calcutta. Nor is it necessary to assign moral defects in the witness as the cause of this untrustworthiness. The truth is, Sir, that the power of answering questions intelligently is a fruit and result of the habit of interrogating yourself; and men who do not look into their ideas, who take outward facts as they find them, and remember nothing but their actual experience, cannot answer questions except as to the barest matters of fact. The only effect of interrogating them is either to reduce them to confusion, or to get any answers out of them which the questioner pleases. Now I will show presently what was the character of the questions put to the witnesses; at present I will only say that their testimony was oral, and it related to 'indistinct ideas' belonging to the past. But surely, Sir, in the Panjáb as well as elsewhere, evidence grows weaker in proportion as it grows older, and therefore necessarily, though the mere fact of its relating to matters of old date, the evidence taken during the recent settlement operations was incalculably weaker than that taken immediately after annexation. But the age of the evidence adduced before them was by no means the heaviest disadvantage with which the present Settlement Officers had to struggle. Surely it must be evident that the motives to false testimony had vastly increased, at least on the part of one class. Property in land which had little or no value before the annexation, has now a very great and distinct value, and the real struggle obviously is whether, in the case of the occupancy-tenants, the new profits shall be divided between them and the landlords, or shall go wholly to the landlords. The position, therefore, of the two parties to this contention in the Settlement Courts was this: on the one side you had very ignorant men, asked very difficult questions as to indistinct ideas of old date. On the other, you had witnesses, a shade better educated, more thoroughly aware of the matter in hand, but under the strongest temptation to adapt their testimony to their interests.

Sir, there is much in the detail of the Panjáb settlement proceedings which relates to matters which are quite foreign to my experience. There are, however, certain peculiarities in the method of enquiry pursued, on which it is not presumptuous in me to form an opinion, and certainly those peculiarities have not given me a favourable impression of the value of the investigation. I observe, for example, that in a great number of cases, the persons under examination, whether landlords, tenants, or witnesses, were asked whether a particular class had a Right to do a particular thing, and the point was frequently put for decision to the committees who acted as referees. I do not mean to say that the word right was invariably used, but the questions constantly implied the notion of a Right, or some shade of it. Now, everybody who has paid even a superficial attention to the subject is aware that there is no more ambiguous term than Right, and no idea less definite. I do not suppose that in the Oriental patois in which these questions were asked, the word is less equivocal than in the cultivated European languages, and yet in Europe it is only the strictest and severest jurists who speak of Rights with accuracy. Primâ facie when you ask whether a class had rights of a particular kind, you mean legal rights; but legal rights imply a regular administration of fixed laws, and there was confessedly no such administration under Sikh rule. Yet I find the Settlement Officers enquiring about rights of eviction or enhancement, without explaining (and apparently without being conscious of the need of explaining) whether the rights in question were of the nature of legal rights, or whether moral rights were meant, or whether what was intended was merely the physical power of the stronger to do what he pleased to the weaker. And these difficult and ambiguous questions—questions which in reality sometimes involved highly refined abstractions—questions which I do not hesitate to say that, even if I had been cognizant of the facts, I could not always myself have answered without fuller elucidation of their meaning—were put to ignorant and uneducated men, to men therefore who, like all ignorant men, are capable only of thinking in the concrete and in connection with actual facts, and were put moreover with reference to a state of facts which ceased to exist twenty years ago. Perhaps, Sir, it may be said that the rights about which enquiry was made were customary rights—rights arising under a Custom. But here, so far from having my ideas cleared, I find myself in greater difficulties than ever. For it appears to me that in the papers relating to the recent Panjáb settlement, the word 'custom' is used in a sense certainly unknown to jurisprudence, and I believe also to popular usage. A custom is constantly spoken of, as if it were independent of that which is generally, if not universally, considered to be the foundation of a custom. According to the understanding of lawyers, and I should have said according to the understanding of all men, barbarous or civilized, the foundation of a Custom is habitual practice, a series of facts, a succession of instances, from whose constant recurrence a rule is inferred. But the writers of these papers perpetually talk of customs of eviction, of enhancement, or of rack-rent, and in the same breath admit the non-existence of any practice of the kind alleged. Some broadly state that there never was an instance of the customary right being exercised; nearly all allow that its exercise was as rare as possible, nor do they attempt to show that the rare instances of its exercise were not simple acts of violence. Indeed, a good deal of the papers is taken up with conjectural explanations of the reasons why the custom was not acted upon, or, as I should venture to put it, why, there was in point of fact no custom at all. A curious illustration of these (to me) remarkable ideas about customs occurs in the suggestions of the gentlemen who lately assembled at Murree for the revision of the Bill as settled by the Select Committee. The Bill contained, and still contains, a provision allowing the presumption of occupancy right, created by entry in the settlement record, to be rebutted by showing that 'tenants of the same class in the same or adjacent villages have ordinarily been ejected at the will of the landlord.' The so-called Murree Committee proposed to reject this provision, and even the more moderate section proposed to substitute another to the effect that rebuttal should turn upon proof that the entry was opposed to a custom locally recognized and acted upon. Obviously they considered that it would be impossible to show that tenants were ordinarily evicted at will by their landlords. As a mere matter of curiosity, I should really like to see the evidence which would be tendered to a court of justice for the purpose of establishing a custom, in the face of an admission that instances of the exercise of the alleged customary right had never occurred or were extraordinary occurrences. Sir, I must say that, on this ground alone, the claim preferred for the recent settlement to be superior to all former settlements, must be held to fail. I do not pretend to have an exhaustive acquaintance with the voluminous literature of Indian revenue settlements; but I know something of it, and I think I can see that the older investigators of Native customs proceeded on a mode of enquiry which is perfectly intelligible. They enquired for the most part into practices and into facts, not into vague opinions. They inferred a rule from the facts they believed themselves to have discovered, and then they stereotyped it. No doubt they may have made mistakes. They may have generalized too rapidly, may have neglected local exceptions, and may have made a usage universal which was only general or even occasional. But at all events their undertaking was perfectly practicable, whereas I doubt whether the method followed in the recent settlement enquiries was not fatal to any trustworthy result.

That, Sir, however, is not my case. I say that even if these beneficial rights of occupancy were really planted in the Panjáb by the British Government, they have grown up and borne fruit under its shelter, and that it is not for its honour or interest to give them up to ruthless devastation. Nor is it solely for the interest of the British Government that they should be protected—it is for the interest of everybody who has a vested right in property, whether moveable or immoveable, and whatever be the form it may take among the innumerable forms which proprietary right assumes in India. There could be no more dangerous precedent than the wholesale obliteration by the Government of vested rights which the Government created fifteen or twenty years ago, merely on the ground that the Government made a mistake. I know, indeed, that it is a point against me that this view does not seem to be taken by the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb, whose name is not to be mentioned without respect. But I cannot help thinking that Sir Donald Macleod reconciles these proceedings with his sense of justice and expediency by his belief that a system might be devised of buying out the occupancy-tenants on the principle of equitable compensation. Now, Sir, I have always thought that over limited areas of land in India, particularly in the vicinity of great cities, where capital is abundant, and where great cultivation is possible, a system of buying out occupancy-rights for fair value might have much to recommend it, and might solve many embarrassing difficulties. But I am satisfied that, for a whole province like the Panjáb, such a system would be quite impracticable, and I say this the more confidently, because the plan has evidently been suggested by what seems to me an erroneous view of the functions of the English Copyhold Commissioners. It has been truly said, in the first place, that the office of the Copyhold Commission is to get rid not of the class corresponding to the tenants, but of the class corresponding to the landlords. It is the lord of the manor who is bought out, not the copyholder. Thus it is the few who receive compensation from the many, not the many from the few. Moreover, the compensation proper to be given for the heriots and other manorial dues is calculable with comparative ease, and scarcely amounts in any whole year a very serious aggregate sum. Still, with all these facilities, the Copyhold Commission is notoriously cumbrous and dilatory in its action. A body of functionaries, however, charged with arranging compensation for all the tenants affected by the recent settlement proceedings, would have a herculean task before it. The rights to be paid for hardly admit of estimation, and the mass of those rights is enormous. Although, too, the Panjáb has advanced so extraordinarily in prosperity, it may be doubted whether it contains the means for the pecuniary compensation which would be required; and, indeed, I venture to think that if an attempt were made over territory so vast as that comprised in a whole Indian province to buy out occupancy-rights on equitable principles, no system would be possible, except that recently tried in Russia—a system of dividing the land between landlord and tenant, which would probably be infinitely more unpopular with the proprietary class than the present system of dividing the profits.

Sir, I have stated my doubts as to this Bill as strongly as possible, chiefly because, as I said before, I do not think that side of the question has had fair play. But I do not in the least wish to withdraw from the compromise which the Bill embodies. The article of that compromise which involves the greatest concession on the part of those who agree with me, is the erasure from the settlement record of all the tenants, once registered as having occupancy-rights, who have admitted before the present Settlement Officers that they can be evicted by their landlords. I will not enquire too closely or curiously whether the admission was intelligently given, whether the tenant was or was not thinking of the moral right of his landlord, or of his power as the stronger man. Every compromise must involve concession, and if there is any of these rights which it is equitable to destroy, they are those which the owner has in some sense or other disclaimed. One point, and one only, remains for me to notice. It may perhaps appear at first sight a merely legal point, but it is in reality one of the most far-reaching importance. Sir, what is the proper construction to be put on certain provisions of Regulation VII of 1822? On the annexation of a new country to the British Indian Empire, two operations are carried through,—the revenue payable to Government is settled, and a Record of Rights in land, which has hitherto been considered the surest guarantee of the stability of those rights, is framed by the Settlement Officers. When the period for which the revenue has been settled expires, everybody agrees that it can be re-settled according to the increased or diminished profits of the land. But can the Record of Rights be re-cast by the Settlement Officers at new settlements, not on complaint, but officiously and of their own motion? This is the claim of the Panjáb Settlement Officers, which I deny on grounds both of reason and of expediency. I admit that the language of the old Regulation is incautious. The truth is, these older enactments were not intended to stand the tests now applied to them; if they were carried out in a sense not intended by their framers, an executive order, which in fact emanated from an authority identical in point of personnel with the Legislature, corrected the error. But, I believe, chiefly because the authors of the Regulation were great men and men of strong sense, that they intended nothing so preposterous as a periodical, wholesale, officious revision of the Record. Moreover, it is only the 'spirit' of the Regulations which has been extended to the Panjáb, and whatever be the exact meaning of the distinction, it is assuredly the letter, and not the spirit, of the Regulation which countenances these late proceedings. For just see what is claimed. The land in India is the foundation of society, and it is asserted that once every ten, fifteen, or twenty years a number of gentlemen, many of whom it is surely not disrespectful to call young gentlemen, may go in and reconstruct the very basis of society. I have sometimes heard and seen the advocacy of tenant-right called socialistic, but what Communist in his wildest dreams ever imagined a wholesale re-adjustment of rights in land once every fifteen years? There is not, moreover, the smallest security for the principles on which such re-adjustment would take place. If an ordinary contingency of Indian life had happened, and certain able and energetic officials had fallen ill during the late settlement, I am not sure that it would have concluded on the principles on which it began; and, for all I know, if these pretensions be allowed, and if the whirligig of Indian opinion goes round as rapidly as it has done in my time, we may have tenant-right introduced universally fifteen years hence, possibly in imitation of Irish legislation which might have occurred in the interval. There is no question, Sir, I suppose, that the extraordinary burst of prosperity which invariably follows the annexation of a new State to British India is chiefly owing to the stability which we give to property—more to that perhaps than to the protection we give to life and limb. If, however, these novel views as to the unlimited supremacy of Government officers over property prevail, I am not sure we shall not by such experiments arrest the progress of the country in civilization even more than did the dispossessed Native ruler by his tyranny and oppression."

The Hon'ble Mr. TAYLOR.—"Mr. Maine has so entirely expressed the views which I myself entertain on the question of tenant-right in the Panjáb, and as to the necessity for legislation at the present time, that it is quite unnecessary for me to attempt to follow my Hon'ble friend over the same ground. I desire only to explain to the Council very briefly why I concur in the general recommendations of the Select Committee in regard to this Bill, and why I object to the proposed clause in section 19 empowering the landlord by tendering compensation to eject a tenant with a right of occupancy.

I may begin by saying that I regard a tenant with the right of occupancy, acquired by prescription or in the manner which is declared in this Bill to constitute such right in the Panjáb, as a co-proprietor of the land in his occupation, who cannot be ousted on any pretence whatever so long as he pays the rent which is properly chargeable thereon. Such a man is not to be confounded with a tenant-at-will, a term which is unknown to the old Regulations. Tenants-at-will are for the most part the servants and labourers of the occupancy peasant-proprietary, usually of a different caste, and whose rights are governed by prescription or custom peculiar to each part of India. It may perhaps be said, as Sir Richard Temple did in fact say in Committee, that my notion of the proper status of an occupancy-ryot is derived from the state of things with which I am familiar in the Southern Presidency, where the ryots are real peasant-proprietors, absolute owners of the land they occupy or cultivate. This opinion of my Hon'ble friend is no doubt true to some extent. I should, indeed, be glad to think that the peasant-proprietary of every part of the vast Bengal Presidency were in a fair way of being raised to the position which is fortunately occupied by the ryots to the south and west of India, whom I regard, not as the pauperised tenantry which they are described to be by persons very imperfectly informed, but as the true landlord class which the ryotwar system, when properly administered, is calculated to produce.

We have to deal, however, with matters as we find them in the particular province to which our legislation relates, and it has certainly been my wish in common, I feel sure, with that of my colleagues in the Committee, that the principles of this Bill should be as closely as possible adapted to the circumstances known to exist in the Panjáb. I believe that this measure, which, after infinite trouble and lengthened discussions with those most intimately acquainted with the wants of the province, has been devised as a compromise between two extreme views, will, in the main, provide a satisfactory settlement of the long pending question.

I hold in my hand a paper on the subject of this Bill written at my request by Mr. Forsyth, the able and experienced Commissioner of the Jalandhar Division, who is distinguished by the moderation of his views on the tenant-right question. He very justly remarks that 'the truth in this, as in most controversies, lies in the mean between two extremes,' and it is this mean which it has been the object of the Bill to hit. After the picture which has been drawn by Mr. Maine of the hapless condition of the many thousands of the occupancy peasantry who have been degraded from their former rights by the proceedings of the Settlement Officers, the Council will hear with satisfaction from one who speaks from personal knowledge, that 'it is a great mistake to suppose the Panjáb generally to be in a state of agitation regarding the tenant-right question. Such agitation is confined to the Amritsar and Lahore Divisions, where a general up-heaving or disturbance of the rights of tenants has been made. In many districts the landlords themselves have come forward to propose that their tenants should be protected.' After stating as an undoubted fact that many mistakes were made in the earlier settlements, and describing why this was unavoidably so, Mr. Forsyth goes on to say that as years passed by, 'the people, ignorant and careless, continued in their old ways, taking no heed, and probably unconscious of the erroneous entries. But now, as lapse of time gives a validity to titles otherwise untenable' (and he might have added, as land has increased in value), 'we are frequently assailed by petitions to correct alleged errors.

'For the correction of such errors, some steps were necessary, but Mr. Prinsep went too far in assuming that all entries in the records required to be submitted to fresh enquiry.

'It was remarked by a Panjáb proprietor that there was no stability in our principle, for twenty years' tenants have been recognised as having certain rights; now we are told Government has changed its policy, and they are to have no rights. Perhaps in another twenty years, another change of policy may take place.

'The proposed Bill provides a sufficient remedy in allowing manifest errors to be brought before a regular tribunal.'

Mr. Forsyth then proceeds to comment on several of the details of the Bill, and I must admit that he takes a somewhat lower view of the status of an occupancy-ryot than that which I myself hold. I think, however, that the Council will consider his testimony, as given in the extracts I have quoted, to be very valuable and generally favourable to the measure now under discussion.

There is one fact of which every year's experience and observation only strengthens my conviction, which is that, however much local circumstances, habits, customs, and even tenures and interests in land may vary in different parts of the country, the normal condition of the cultivating peasantry in reference to the land is essentially the same in every province of India. Their position is that of hereditary occupiers at customary fixed rates of rent, but without a transferable interest in the soil. This rent is payable either to the Government direct, or to a middle man, a superior zamíndár, or proprietor with certain well understood rights and privileges which are recognised by the Government. Now, one of the main objects of this Bill, as it was the object of all similar enactments like the Oudh Bill and the Bengal Act X of 1859, is to confirm and strengthen this tenant-right of occupancy, not by curtailing the proper rights and privileges of the superior landlord, but by giving to the tenant such security of tenure as will enable him with confidence to employ his capital and his labour upon the improvement of his land. What is chiefly wanted in order to effect this, is permanence of assessment and the power of disposing of his property as he pleases. Both these advantages are confirmed to the peasant-occupant under the present Bill. He remains in undisturbed possession of his land so long as he pays the rent, or at least he will so remain if the amendment of my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Strachey, be adopted, and he may alienate it to whom he pleases after first offering it to his landlord at the market price. But if to these conditions of his tenure you attach the penalty of ejection from the land at the will of the landlord or proprietor, on payment of such compensation calculated on the annual net profits as a Court may think fit, in order, I suppose, that the landlord may put in a relative of his own or a stranger who offers a higher rent, you completely neutralize the benefit intended to be conferred upon the occupancy-tenant; what you give with one hand you take away with the other; you reduce his tenure in fact to that of a mere tenant-at-will, and deprive him of the right of doing what he pleases with his own; you at once depreciate the value of his property, for the occupancy-right is a property in the strictest sense of the term, and you destroy the feeling of secure possession which it is so desirable to encourage. I consider this to be a move in the wrong direction. If any one is to be bought out, I would buy out the so-called landlord rather than the tenant. According to my view, the better policy in the interests of all parties is to convert the permanent holder of the land, who is in fact a co-proprietor, into the actual owner of the property on the sole condition of the regular payment of his rent. The hereditary cultivator is the real man of progress; as a rule, it is he and no other who puts his labour and his capital into the land, and it is upon his industry and frugality that all agricultural improvement depends. It is clearly, therefore, to the advantage of the landlord to deal with him as the permanent occupant, and thus give him a direct incentive to improve the property.

The only restriction which by the common law and usage of India has hitherto been imposed upon the co-proprietary or occupancy-right of the hereditary cultivator is the prohibition or disability to alienate without the consent of the Government or the landlord. In the south and west of India, where the ryots hold direct from the Government, this restriction has been removed and the cultivator's interest in the soil has, under our permissive acquiescence, been developed into a transferable right of property. The Bill proposes to confer this right, though qualified by the landlord's right of pre-emption. This is a valuable concession so far as it goes, but I should prefer to give the tenant the power of purchasing out and out this transferable right, once for all, for a fair equivalent. On this subject I beg to refer to a Minute which I wrote several years ago when the question of the relative rights of zamíndárs and ryots in Lower Bengal was under discussion. I then said, when referring to several points which affected the condition of landed property under Lord Cornwallis' Permanent Settlement,—'another point is the advantage that would accrue by converting into a saleable property the bare hereditary right of occupancy enjoyed by the ryots of Bengal. The earlier Regulations and Act X of 1859, in providing ejectment for non-payment of rent, do not regard the right of occupancy as a saleable property, and this no doubt is strictly correct. But this restriction upon the transfer or sale of the ryot's rights is worth little or nothing to the zamíndár so long as the ryot can transmit the occupancy to his heirs and relations without limit; and the removal of this restriction by adding very materially to the value of the land would indirectly benefit both parties. It seems to me, therefore, to be within the province of the Legislature to provide by law for the compulsory enfranchisement of the restricted tenure of the occupancy-ryots by the payment to the zamíndár, say, of two and a half times the annual net profit enjoyed by the ryot, which would be about equal to one year's full rent of the land.' This of course is a matter for calculation, but as regards lands paying the full rent, the value to the ryot is the surplus after rent and all expenses of tillage are defrayed, which on the average cannot amount to much more than half the rent. 'On payment of this fine once for all, irrespective of the ordinary yearly rent, the ryots would acquire a transferable property in the land occupied by them.' I added that such a measure would have a very beneficial effect upon the present imperfect condition of landed property in Bengal. Probably, however, for the present as regards the Panjáb at least, the Bill goes far enough; and if the one flaw to which I have referred be removed, I for one shall be content if its provisions should become law."

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY.—" Sir, I feel that the time has past in which it was possible to hope for a more satisfactory settlement than this Bill affords of the difficulties that have arisen in regard to these questions connected with the tenure of land in the Panjáb. But while I admit this, and while I express my concurrence with those who desire that this Bill may now pass into law, I wish to state the opinions which I hold regarding the circumstances that have rendered legislation necessary. This necessity, as my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Maine, has just shown, has been forced upon us by the proceedings which have been lately taken by the officers of the Settlement Department in the Panjáb. In my opinion regarding those proceedings, I agree so entirely with everything that Mr. Maine has said, and I think his statement of the facts, and the conclusions which he has drawn from those facts, so complete and so unanswerably true, that I should have felt inclined to remain silent during this part of the discussion on the Bill, did I not feel it to be my duty, as a Member of this Council, not only to assist in repairing by legislation, so far as this may now be practicable, the actual mischief that has been done, and in preventing such mischief for the future; but not to lose this opportunity of publicly declaring my belief that those proceedings have neither been right in principle nor practically expedient, but, on the contrary, that their tendency has been injurious to the most important interests of the country.

The principal questions which have been under discussion are those connected with rights of occupancy in the land, and these are questions on which, as we all know, Englishmen hold views of the most opposite and irreconcilable character.

Notwithstanding these differences, there has been, up to a certain point, a remarkable unanimity in regard to the facts from which our conclusions are to be drawn. The principal of these facts are those connected with the conditions under which land was ordinarily held in the Panjáb before the British conquest.

My Hon'ble friend, Mr. Maine, has read to the Council the opinion of His Honor the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb, to the effect that for a long series of years before the annexation of the Panjáb, proprietary rights in land had become almost extinguished, or had been deprived of nearly all their value. The Financial Commissioner has written to the same effect. He states that, although there were numerous co-existing interests in the soil, 'sixteen years ago there was neither landlord nor tenant in the Panjáb, according to our acceptation of those terms.' And in another place he writes as follows:—

"The terms of landlord and tenant, as familiar to us in England, are likely to mislead when applied to the classes we have to deal in the Panjáb, whose relations to each other we are now called upon to determine. If His Honour the Lieutenant Governor will refer to the several settlement reports quoted by Mr. Prinsep, he will observe how very general the testimony is that, on the advent of British rule, the so-called privileged tenants were found occupying a status so similar in all respects to that of proprietors that in some cases it was difficult to distinguish between them. The Sikh Government had not, it is true, by any formal proclamation, such as was issued recently by Lord Canning in Oudh, confiscated the rights of proprietary classes; but by settled policy, persistently pursued for years, it had effectually confiscated all such rights, and during this time the burden upon the land was so heavy that the obligation was not on the part of the proprietor who gave the land, but on the part of the man who took the land on the condition of meeting the Government demand upon it. * * This and other settlement reports, and the experience of every officer who has enquired into the tenures of the Panjáb, will bear me out in saying that, while, on the one hand, property in the European sense of the term has been created by the British Government in the Panjáb, on the other hand there are to be found in almost every village a class of persons who had been in uninterrupted occupation of their holdings, which they had transmitted like any other heritable property from father to son, and for which either no payment was made to the so-called proprietor, or if payment was made, it was of the nature of the dues for lands of copyhold and customary tenure in England to the lords of manors, rather than or those paid by tenants to proprietors.'

It would be easy to multiply quotations to show that the highest authorities in the Panjáb have concurred in these opinions regarding the tenure of land under the Sikh Government.

Under such a condition of things as this, it is clear that neither proprietors nor tenants practically possessed any rights in the land at all. And, indeed, as Mr. Maine has observed, it is idle to talk of rights of property in a state of society in which there was no law, and no administration of justice, and no possibility of enforcing any claim, however equitable it might be. This much seems to me to be certain that, although the cultivator of the soil had no rights capable of being maintained against the will of any one more powerful than himself, there was no part of India in which rights of private property in land were weaker than they were in the Panjáb when we took possession of the country. There can hardly be a better sign of this than the fact stated by Mr. Prinsep, and to which Mr. Maine has referred that in one division, out of 60,000 tenants recorded at the settlement as having rights of occupancy, no less than 25,000 were found to have paid under the Sikh Government no rent to the nominal proprietors.

A great deal has been said in condemnation of the settlements that were made after the annexation of the Panjáb. I am far from denying that many mistakes may have been made, and I fully admit that those mistakes ought to be corrected so far as this, after the lapse of so many years, is now possible without leading to greater hardship and injustice than that for which it is desired to apply a remedy. But notwithstanding such mistakes, I believe, from all the information that I have been able to obtain, that no more careful and better settlements have, all things considered, ever been made in India than those which were made in the Panjáb. I think that the reports of those settlements show that they were made in all essential respects on sound principles, and, I will add, on principles far sounder than those in accordance with which it has been proposed to alter them. These settlements were based on the rules which had been laid down and acted upon for many years in the North-Western Provinces. It was the object of the Settlement Officers to ascertain the existing customs, under which land had actually been held, and to secure to every one the advantages which he had actually enjoyed, and to declare judicially that all classes interested in the land should thenceforward hold by right the benefits which they had previously possessed under a most uncertain tenure.

Such an undertaking was necessarily a most difficult one, and it was impossible that errors should not be committed in recognizing and recording, through the length and breadth of a great country, rights in the land which were often of the obscurest kind, and which were for the first time recognized as rights at all. If, as Mr. Maine has said, it was difficult shortly after the occupation of the Panjáb, to ascertain the nature of the advantages which, under the Sikh Government, had been derived from the land by parties possessing conflicting interests, how much more difficult, not to say impossible, must this be now, when so many years have elapsed, when the condition of the country has become absolutely changed, and the people have learned the value of the rights which have been bestowed upon them. I believe that the most careful investigation that can now be made into the condition of things existing in any given estate, before the annexation of the Panjáb, must, from the nature of the case, be almost invariably worth much less than the most cursory investigation made under the orders of the Settlement Officer fifteen or twenty years ago. I decline to believe in the superiority of the records of rights that have been lately made in the Panjáb over those that were made at the first settlement, under much more favourable circumstances, by officers of not less zeal and ability than the officers of the Settlement Department at the present time.

The truth, I believe, is that this desire to alter the arrangements of the old settlements has had its origin in that strong belief which is ingrained in the minds of so many Englishmen that the rights over the land of the man who happens to be called the landlord, have necessarily something of a peculiar and an almost sacred character. It is seen that the limitation of the demands of the Government upon the land, the protection given to property by our laws, and all the other causes which have made the country tranquil, and rich and prosperous, have given to the land a value which it did not possess before, and that, in fact, a new property in the land has been created. It seems to many Englishmen the plainest justice that this new and valuable property should be deemed to belong to the so-called proprietors of the land, and they think it the extremest injustice that a large proportion of it should, in consequence of the system followed at the first settlement, go not to the landlords, but to the actual cultivators of the soil.

It seems, Sir, to me that such feelings are in the Panjáb altogether out of place. If the settlement proceedings had taken away from the so-called proprietors anything which they had formerly possessed, I should be among the first to say that they had been unjustly treated, and that they deserved redress. But I totally fail to see that any injustice was committed. I am now speaking generally. I do not deny that injustice may have been done in particular cases, and, as I have already said, where this has happened a remedy should, if possible, be applied. Speaking generally, I see no reason to doubt that the settlement in the Panjáb secured to the landlords everything to which they were equitably entitled. Justice would have been done if there had been secured to them no greater profit from the land than that which they had actually enjoyed before, but in fact much more than this was given to them. When it was found, as it was actually found in many thousands of cases, that tenants so-called had been from time immemorial in possession of their holdings, and that they had never paid any rent to the so-called landlords, there seemed to the settlement authorities no reason why the position of such men should be altered, or why, because a man happened to be called by a name which people chose to translate by the English term proprietor, he should receive, at the expense of other people, advantages which he had never received before.

And it is important to remember that, in making the first settlement in the Panjáb, no great political questions were involved, similar to those that have been involved in some other parts of India, and especially in Oudh—a country of great and influential landholders. Such landholders in the Panjáb are, I believe—and if I am wrong, your Excellency will, I trust, correct me—comparatively speaking, very few in number. The Panjáb is and always has been a country of peasant-proprietors, occupying their own small holdings: not a country of great landlords. Under these circumstances, it would have been meaningless to have adopted in the Panjáb what has been called an aristocratic policy, such as that adopted by Lord Canning in Oudh, with the avowed object of enlisting in the support of our Government the natural leaders of the people. The settlement in the Panjáb was made in accordance with the system which had been adopted for many years in the North-Western Provinces. While I do not believe that the just rights of landlords were set aside, it must be allowed that the main tendency of that system was towards the improvement of the position of the class of peasant-proprietors, and of the tenants having permanent and hereditary rights of occupancy in the land. That system assumed that it was desirable, for the agricultural prosperity of the country, that the people who actually occupy and cultivate the land should have a permanent interest in it; and that so long as they fulfil the obligations under which they hold, they should be protected against arbitrary ejectment, and against unreasonable enhancement of rent. I believe, for my part, that these principles are right, and whether they are universally applicable or not, they were the only principles that were applicable in the Panjáb. I believe that there is no country in the world where the notion of absolute property in land is more foreign to the people than it is in India; and I think that these voluminous papers which have been laid before the Council, show that there is no part of India in which this idea of absolute property in land had less existence than it had under the Native Government of the Panjáb. If the Settlement Officers in the Panjáb erred in giving too great an amount of protection to the actual occupiers of the soil, I believe that they at least erred in the right direction. I am satisfied that it is true that the class of small proprietors cultivating their own land, and the class of tenants with a permanent interest in their holdings, are the classes from which almost all real improvement of the land in India is derived, and that, without security of tenure and some limitation of rent, it is vain to expect agricultural progress. England is the only country in the civilized world in which any other doctrines are seriously held; but when we see what is going on in regard to the position of the occupiers of land in Ireland, it seems hardly possible to doubt that great changes in the tenure of land may not be far distant even in our own country.

I believe that these principles would be true even if Indian landlords were improvers: but in point of fact they are not improvers. Nor does Indian agriculture require for its success the investment in the land of the money of capitalist landlords. That success depends far more on the careful and unremitting attention to all the operations of husbandry given by men who feel a direct and personal interest in their work, and who know that they will themselves reap the benefits of their own labour. It is the too common custom of Englishmen to doubt the wisdom of any systems which differ from those of their own country. Even in England, where circumstances are altogether peculiar, and where the tenure of land is, to the last degree, exceptional, I believe that the principles which I advocate are generally true. In all other countries, of which I know anything, and especially in India, I believe them to be true without men; he had read their copious and exhaustive papers which had been circulated from time to time, and he was bound to say that the language used by the Hon'ble members to whom he referred was not such as to encourage officers of Government in a very important part of their duty, viz., not to conceal opinions which they might think it their right to lay before their superiors, which was intimately bound up with the peace and content of the country, and which was the result of the most careful investigation and profound reflection.

If we examined these papers carefully, it would be found that the weight of evidence showed that during the Sikh rule, the right of occupancy recognised in the Bill had no existence whatever, though practically ryots were not evicted owing, doubtless, to their utility to their landlords. The Hon'ble Mr. Maine had dwelt on the disorder and anarchy which prevailed in the Panjáb before our annexation of that province, and he proceeded to quote the Lieutenant Governor on his side, and to endeavour to make it appear that Sir Donald Macleod coincided in the opinion that, owing to that state of anarchy, there was no possibility of arriving at the conclusion that any right, or shadow of right, as regards the land, existed in the Panjáb under the Sikh rule. But what did Sir Donald Macleod really say? He would read the 23rd paragraph of Sir Donald Macleod's Minute of February 10th:—

"It has been urged by some that proprietary rights have acquired reality and value solely by the action of our Government, and that we have the right to dispose, as we think best, of what we have thus created. But I do not believe we can thus deal with rights in land without injustice and imminent danger. If any suppose that proprietary rights in land, however depressed or kept in abeyance, have ceased to be recognized and tenaciously cherished, I would refer them to the third part of Mr. Prinsep's printed papers, where, at the eighth and following pages, he goes pretty fully into this question. It was pointed out by Lord Metcalfe many years ago, in a passage which has been often quoted, how, after one or two generations had been driven out of a village in India by violence or oppression, succeeding generations would return [illegible] st available opportunity to resume possession, each family occupying the precise [illegible] and pr[illegible] its sires; and we may rest assured that there is nothing in regard to which it is more [illegible] I asvin[illegible]n a Foreign Government desiring peace, prosperity and permanence, to show the [illegible] the Bil[illegible]sideration and tenderness than proprietary rights in land."

That was [illegible] pinion of the Lieutenant Governor, as was seen in the quotation, and it was [illegible]nctioned by the great authority of Lord Metcalfe.

There was another authority even greater than Lord Metcalfe—Mountstuart Elphinstone. [illegible] of the earlier chapters of his History, called the village communit[illegible] found everywhere in India on which Indian Native society was u[illegible]ed "the indestructible atom of civilization." This being so, were [illegible]ld, because anarchy and violence prevailed for thirty or forty or eve[illegible]ed years in the Panjáb, that no rights of property existed there [illegible]use we failed on annexation to recognise the exact status of propr[illegible] therefore impossible to ascertain and confirm their rights? He (th[illegible]R-IN-CHIEF) ventured to say that any one with the smallest practica[illegible]f any other part of India would reject with astonishment the p[illegible]He well recollected that in the Bombay Presidency, certain tenure[illegible] subject of legislation. There was the Mírásí tenure, which no d[illegible]e held by Mr. Taylor to be of no importance, but which nearly ev[illegible] familiar with Southern and Western India, would describe as be[illegible] of the utmost importance by those affected by it, a tenure w[illegible]y applied to lands held by absolute hereditary proprietorship under c[illegible]tions. Sir George Clerk was always particularly strong on this p[illegible]bsolutely declined to permit the weakening or invasion of such tenures [illegible]ights belonging to them. Then there were the Khots in some of the [illegible]atta Provinces. They descended from officers who had exercised certain here[illegible]ary duties, and for them a law was especially passed by the local legislature. Again, for the neighbourhood of Kattyawár we had legislated for the assistance of hereditary rights, and the perpetuation of the families enjoying them. That country and the districts in which the Mírásídárs and Khots to whom he had referred were found had been disturbed by anarchy and civil war quite as much as the Panjáb. The evidence in favour of the existence in every part of India of rights aristocratic and territorial never, so far as he knew, used to be questioned till the school of Mr. Bird and Mr. Thomason came to be in the ascendant—a school which, as was well known, had been always hostile to the proprietors, and had been triumphant in the North-Western Provinces. The permanent settlement of Bengal had, on the contrary, been founded on a notion of rights which were now declared to have no existence. We were now in the hands of a school different from that which ruled British India, and which, at the end of the last and during the early part of the present century, laid the foundations of the system existing in Bengal Proper at the present day.

He, Sir WILLIAM MANSFIELD, did not on this occasion offer an opinion either of approval or disapproval of that system. He merely wished to show how different had been the views prevalent in the early part of the century from those which had now become fashionable, and that the notion of the difficulty of ascertaining rights of property was a new one.

He repeated that he did not wish to make an opposition speech. He would therefore now content himself with laying down this proposition,—that while the Legislature determines not to invalidate the rights of the ryot, as amended after the annexation of the Panjáb, it ought to take care not to add to those rights. Now, it seemed to him that the present Bill gave occupancy-ryots two most important privileges which were never contemplated by the original framer of the Bill, and which had not been recommended by the Lieutenant Governor. First, the Bill in declaring by section 36 that a right of occupancy should devolve on the tenant's male lineal descendants, and failing them on his male collateral relatives, would, HIS EXCELLENCY apprehended, when taken in conjunction with the definitions contained in section 3, be held to confer the power of creating, by adoption, an heir to a right of occupancy which would otherwise have merged for the benefit of the proprietor. This right of adoption had caused so much trouble in dealing with larger affairs that he could not understand why it should be introduced so as to create similar difficulties in smaller but infinitely more numerous transactions. In all the [illegible] creation of a new right for the benefit of the tenant and to [illegible] In short, the proprietor. [illegible] is propert[illegible] value of [illegible]

HIS EXCELLENCY spoke with diffidence on a matter rel[illegible] he Co[illegible] to local custom, but surely the provisions of section 34 [illegible] and a novel advantage on occupants. If we looked to t[illegible] found that Mr. Leslie Saunders was strongly against the exis[illegible] alienation such as that section proposed to confer on the ryot. [illegible] said,—

"I believe the rule allowing, where exchange of land has o[illegible], occupancy still to be considered as continuous occupancy, to be entirely opposed to what [illegible] has hitherto been considered the custom of the country, for in hundreds of cases I have myself [illegible] investigated I have invariably found this incident to be admitted by the tenants as one of the [illegible] main proofs of their not having right of occupancy. Such exchange of fields before annex[illegible]ation may be deemed by Courts voluntary, because no tenant would have been upheld in [illegible] such opposition to the will of the land-owner."

Then Mr. Forsyth,—

"I have not given my assent to clause 23 (regardi[illegible] right of transfer by tenants), because I consider that a commission of some kind should be [illegible] first appointed to ascertain the general feeling and wants of the people before we create new ri[illegible]hts, which tend to perpetuate a double property in the soil."

Then Muhammad Hayat Khán,—

"By the usage of this country, the right of occupan[illegible] does not extend to the power of exchanging their lands. Most owners, fearful [illegible]cy of te[illegible] would claim hereditary tenures at intervals of a few years take away from them lands [illegible] their possession, and give them others in lieu to enable them to make their livelihood [illegible]

It would be easy to multiply opinions to the [illegible] Here was another, that of Muhammad Sultán Khán,—

"But as rights exist, and justice and custom both demand that they should be accepted on good and sufficient cause being shown, no small matter should be allowed to set the acknowledged right aside. The tenant's right so acquired is simply that of continuous occupancy; to give them the right of selling and mortgaging at will will trench on the rights of the proprietor; it was never known to exist and is opposed to justice: if allowed, what difference will exist between the tenant and proprietor?"

HIS EXCELLENCY confessed that he entirely sympathized with the writer of the passage last cited. It was impossible to find any difference between proprietor and an occupancy-tenant with such a power of alienation as the Committee proposed to confer on the latter.

His Excellency had just been reminded by his Hon'ble friend, Mr. Maine, that the privilege of adoption to which he had referred was founded upon some decision of the Chief Court. That might be, but while we were legislating, no judicial opinion was necessarily binding upon us. It would be observed that Mr. Saunders and Mr. Forsyth raised an important question when they expressed opinions that a broad scheme ought to have been framed for the enfranchisement of the double rights in land. It certainly appeared to him (Sir William Mansfield) that it was extremely to be regretted that this hint had not received the attention deserved by its great importance. In short it was a matter of something more than regret that the Committee, while dealing with the Bill, had not taken the opportunity of expressly extinguishing the double rights in the same property which the landlord and the ryot were said to possess, according to some one or other of the various modes known to the law of civilized countries. This might have been done so as to ensure the status of the ryot who had been found to possess occupancy rights, to provide a just compensation to the landlord, and to get rid of the complication of interests which now existed, and which the Bill, if passed, would sanction. Hon'ble members were perhaps aware of what the Austrian Government had done in Gallicia, and of what had subsequently been done throughout some of the larger provinces of Russia. Although there was no similarity between British subjects and the serfs of Russia, still when what was called freedom was conferred on the latter, question arose regarding their relation towards the proprietors and to the land, which were not without a certain analogy to the interests under consideration. When those great countries dealt with such matters, they went to work in a different fashion from that favoured in India. The problem with them was how, while giving freedom to the serfs, the respective rights of property should be separated and preserved from the dangers of endless dispute and litigation. Thus instead of leaving double rights in the same piece of land after the manner proposed by the Bill, the Russian Government gave a freehold to the serf and compensation to the landlord. The manner in which this had been worked out both by Austria and Russia was not likely to commend itself to a legislature composed of English men; but the idea lying at the root of the arrangements referred to was never less sound, and, as tending to obviate recourse to future litigation, eminently expedient in a popular sense. A similar solution might have been attempted in the Panjáb, according to an English plan to which it was probable no objection could have been reasonably taken. Thus, long leases, say for two or even three lives, might have been given in favour of all ryots with proved occupancy claims, including what had been created under the original British s[illegible] his arrangement would have exactly fitted in with that part of t[illegible] proposed to give compensation for improvements to out-going[illegible]

It was too lat[illegible]er, to discuss a plan which at an earlier stage might have adjus[illegible]roversy in a manner compatible with English notions, and whicl[illegible] being made agreeable to the two parties concerned. But an [illegible] that which he had just thrown out, might be brought forward o[illegible] occasion and adopted by the Panjáb Government if they wer[illegible]ammelled by additions to the rights or privileges which the present [illegible] to give to the ryot,—additions which had not been contemplated [illegible]r the Lieutenant Governor.

His [illegible]refore once more say that, while in no way desiring [illegible]ts of the occupant which had already been s[illegible]h regret and alarm, the provisions of the Bill [illegible]sition, and therefore still more prejudiced the [illegible]

[illegible]r-in-Chief concluded by stating that he reserved to himself [illegible] of moving any amendment which might appear expedient to him [illegible]nse of the foregoing remarks.

The Hon'ble Sir R. Temple desired to rejoin briefly to various remarks that had fallen from the several Hon'ble members who had addressed the Council.

As regards Mr. Maine's remark that there would probably not be capital enough in the province to enable the proprietors to buy out the occupancy-tenants, this expectation might be very correct, but it rather went to show that the measure proposed by the Committee was safe enough.

Again, Mr. Maine had dwelt with great truth and force on the evils which would ensue if the rights recorded at the time of settlement were to be revised every time the settlement itself was revised. But, in fact, the general understanding in the Panjáb had been that the rights and titles so recorded were permanent; and that the revision of settlement referred only to the revenue demand which was limited for a period, and might be retained, raised, or lowered after the expiry of that period. But the rights and interests in the land, once settled, were never to be altered afterwards. And this was usually explained to the people.

Further, Mr. Maine had alluded to the provision whereby the presumption of occupancy-right in the record might be rebutted if the tenant had admitted himself subsequently to be only a tenant-at-will. But the Bill provided that such an admission must be voluntary. The framers of the Bill felt confidence that hereafter the Courts would take notice of this wording. The admissions which might have been drawn from a tenant on cross-examination by a revising officer, or an admission inferred constructively from the tenor of replies and statements, would not be admissions within the meaning of this Act. The admissions intended by the Act must be voluntary, that is made spontaneously by the tenant of his own accord, ex proprio motu.

In respect to Mr. Noble Taylor's remarks to the effect that it would be well if the peasantry of the Panjáb could be brought up to the same status as the ryots who were made virtually proprietors by the ryotwari settlement of Southern India, it might be observed that, although the te[illegible] in this Bill were differently situated from the ryots [illegible] mass of the peasantry in the Panjáb were peasant-pr[illegible] tenure and title as could possibly be found anywhere.

As regards the doubts expressed by His Excell[illegible] under-in[illegible] Chief as to whether occupancy-right had formerly any [illegible] e Panjáb, that was a matter of fact, on which a lengthened stat[illegible] not be made after all the discussion which had occurred. The allegation of the supporters of the Bill of course was this, that, despite the want of proper recognition, and despite many drawbacks, something tantamount to such a right did exist, and existed, too, at least as much as proprietary right. Sir William Mansfield had dilated with much truth on the importance of proprietary right, and had asked whether it was not possible to validate that right. No doubt it was possible, and the right had been thoroughly validated at the Panjáb settlement. He (Sir R. Temple) had when a Settlement Officer been at pains to show that proprietary right in the abstract had been always understood, and at least nominally respected under Sikh rule. Of course, the confirmation which followed at the British settlement was something very superior.

From some of Sir W. Mansfield's remarks, it might perhaps be inferred that the modern school of Indian administrators, who derived their traditions from the great Mr. Thomason, and according to which traditions this Bill had been framed, differred in respect to the maintaining of proprietary right from the original school of Indian statesmen, such as Metcalfe and Mountstuart Elphinstone. But in one most essential particular, these two schools were the same, namely, in the definition and confirmation of peasant proprietorship. No set of officers had done more for the communities of village proprietors in Northern India than the disciples of Mr. Thomason.

It was remarked by Sir W. Mansfield that this Bill introduced two things not contemplated when the settlement of the Panjáb was made, namely, the succession of an adopted heir to an occupancy-tenure, and the power of alienating an occupancy-tenure. As regards adoption, if this tenure were recognised at all, it must be allowed to an adopted heir according to Hindú custom. And the rule of adoption was not new, but was set forth in the Panjáb Civil Code, which was promulgated at the time when all these settlements were going on. As regards alienation, in some sense it might be looked on as a novelty; but then it was strictly limited in this Bill, and, instead of being extended to all occupancy-tenants, was narrowed to those superior classes of these tenants, whose status almost approached that of sub-proprietors.

It was apparently held by Mr. Strachey that even this Bill, good as it might be, would hardly afford perfect remedy to the occupancy-tenants for the objectionable revision which had been attempted to be made of their status. However this might be, he (Sir R. TEMPLE) was confident that this Bill did succeed in meting out justice to the tenants, and in securing to them their fair rights.

His Excellency THE PRESIDENT said—"Reserving my judgment on details, I must state in the strongest terms my anxiety that this Bill should become law to-day without alteration in any essential particular. The problem which it attempts to solve has now been under consideration for several years, and has been before this Government for three years. During this period, inquiries have been going on through a number of districts, by which the rights and the interests of a large portion of the agricultural population have been greatly influenced, and of course their feelings and anxieties have been seriously excited. We cannot stop here. What is wanted is to distinguish and define the relative rights and liabilities of the landholder and the ryot, and to lay down equitable rules for the guidance of Settlement Officers in deciding the questions which ordinarily arise between different classes of the agricultural population. We have heard a good deal to-day of the relative rights of landlord and tenant. But the facts of the case, in the Panjáb at least, are sufficiently simple, though doubtless any one with a little ingenuity could make out a pretty plausible case, especially in favour of a landlord on one side, a tenant on the other, and perhaps a superior proprietor over them both. When the Jalandhar Doáb was being settled, I remember asking the Hill Rájás, to whom did the land belong? With one voice they answered, 'to us, the Rájás.' Then when I asked the same question of the dominant section of the villagers, they said that the land belonged to a particular class or caste in the village, the Rájputs, Brahmans, or the like. The cultivators, lastly, would affirm that while the lands held by the village-proprietors and the waste lands certainly belonged to those parties, the lands in possession of the cultivators also belonged to that class. The real explanation of all this is simply that the land, as a rule, exclusively belonged to no one class. In exceptional cases, the chief of the country or the State might cultivate certain lands by means of the services of serfs or servants, and in that case would take what represented the Government revenue and the profits of cultivation. But as a rule, it may be fairly said that the State took the land-tax, which was usually so heavy as to leave no more than a bare subsistence to the other parties. But whatever was left was divided between the other classes, the proprietor getting nothing or next to nothing from the cultivator beyond the revenue due from the land he occupied. Thus up to a certain point, both in the Panjáb and the North-West Provinces, the right of both parties was scarcely discernible until, by the moderation of the Government demand, a margin in the shape of rent was created. Even under the British Government, where land was plentiful and cultivators scarce, it was not uncommon for the cultivators to be placed by the proprietors on the same footing as themselves, and to share equally in the profits of the lease which they received of the land assessment from Government.

But to keep to the particular question now before us, the fact is that no doubt proprietary rights in the soil do exist in the Panjáb, and do descend; but, nevertheless, wherever the Sikh official, whether Názim or Kárdár, in former days, had any interest in disregarding these rights, he did so as a matter of course. Where the cultivator was a good farmer, he was maintained in his holding, despite the wishes of the proprietor; on the other hand, where the cultivator was idle or unskillful, or where the proprietor represented a strong class, the cultivator went to the wall. Mr. Prinsep knew this very well. He has said that this occurred in the interest of revenue. Truly so. But this does not change the state of the case. The ryot, that is the cultivator, was liable to ejection, but from one circumstance or another was very seldom ejected.

A good deal has been said during the controversy as to the perfunctory mode in which the investigation regarding tenures of land in the Panjáb had been made during the past settlement. My learned friend, Mr. Maine, has not ill described the state of the case. Every one who has any knowledge on the subject must be aware that there was under Sikh rule neither private deeds, nor public records relating to the ownership of land; and that there was nothing but oral testimony to guide our settlement officers. That was absolutely the fact. Even where written leases of the annual revenue a village had to pay existed, that was no proof of proprietary right. The parties whose names were entered in the document were often strangers who farmed the revenue, and collected the different quotas from the occupiers of the land, or divided the produce with them. Or what was more usual, the individuals in whose names the lease was made out were the leading elders of the village, some of the co-parcenary body, who accepted the engagement on their own part and that of the brotherhood. There was no detail of how the lands were occupied, except perhaps with the village accountant, and then the nature of the tenure in each case was not given. The Settlement Officer had thus to go into all the numerous and complicated questions arising from this state of things, and to determine them by oral testimony. There was seldom any difficulty as to the respective rights or shares of the different co-sharers. But as to the old tenants, things were far more obscure; and from one cause or the other, though mainly from the excessive pressure of the revenue, they for the most part held their land from father to son without being ever evicted. The exception to this state of things was so rare that as Mr. Maine has remarked it practically formed the rule that the tenant was not evicted.

In Hazára and in Multán, the Muhammadan proprietors of the land were ousted by hundreds and thousands by the Sikh government and their Názims or Governors. When we annexed the Panjáb, these lands were held by the cultivators, who were admitted to engage direct with the State for the revenue. In the Jalandhar Doáb even the Rájputs and Bráhmans had in many cases been ousted by the Játs, and other industrious races, inferior in caste, [illegible] superior in frugality and enterprise, and therefore better able to bear the fiscal burthens of the State. No doubt, as Sir Donald Macleod has said, t[illegible] were cases of great injustice, and should not be taken by us as precedents [illegible]. Nevertheless they showed that the proprietor's right was not str[illegible] inducement to maintain the cultivator, provided he were ind[illegible] as sometimes to convert him into absolute proprietor, [illegible] his occupying tenure very secure. It was not that the t[illegible] be evicted by the proprietor, but that the latter had no induc[illegible] this course, and when he wished to do it would often be prevente[illegible] government official.

While speaking on this subject, I can recal[illegible] the evidence of a Sikh chief of some mark, now an elderly man, b[illegible] on the light in which the proprietary rights in land were viewed in for[illegible] times under Sikh rule. This Sirdár is a Jágírdár, and if I recollect rig[illegible] a small proprietor of land also, and has an intimate acquaintance with such m[illegible]ters. His evidence is the more valuable, as it was given incidentally on a different, though in some degree a cognate, question—that of a claim to a Jágír. This Sirdár only a few months ago made the following remarks in reply to queries put to him in writing by the Panjáb Government:—

'The above was all the property of the Kanhye Sikhs, that is to say, it was in their Jágír; they were not proprietors of the soil. The Sikhs never regarded proprietary right. They always put in or ousted proprietors as they pleased, for the zamíndárí rights were nevertheless considered separated from the Jágír rights.'

The fact was that, while the Sikhs in their social relations to each other set a high value on proprietary rights in land, more particularly when these were ancestral, their rulers acted very differently, and cared little who held or who cultivated these lands, provided that the revenue was punctually paid. And this circumstance, added to the fact that there was scarcely any, if any, margin left for rent, after the revenue was paid, is the true explanation how it was that the position of the hereditary cultivator was practically very much on a par with that of the proprietor in the same village. Rájá Sáhib Dyál, himself a jágírdár and a proprietor, and formerly like his father a large kárdár, or collector of revenue, under Sikh rule, in his replies to the queries put to him by the Settlement Officers, stated that the cultivators did not pay more than five per cent. rent to the proprietors of the land which they cultivated, and often nothing at all.

Mr. Prinsep in the different papers which he has written on the subject of the status of the cultivator under Sikh rule, quotes the evidence of different officers, all admitting that the proprietor of the land had the power of eviction. I will read extracts from the statements of two of those officers, both of whom were well acquainted with the subject on which they were writing. The first, Lieutenant Colonel Elphinstone, at one time the District Officer of Futtehpore Gogharah in the Multán Division, and subsequently holding the same position in the Jalandhar District, wrote as follows. Alluding to the condition of things in Futtehpore Gogharah, he said :—

'The distinction between hereditary and non-hereditary cultivators is a creation of our Government. Under the Native rule in this part of the Panjáb, it was altogether unknown. Proprietors had the right to eject any tenants whom they disapproved of, however long the latter may have resided on the estate. It is remarkable, therefore, that the cultivators should in some portions of the district, notwithstanding their uncertain tenure, have had the right to sell the 'kásht,' or cultivation of land. Instances of such a right being acknowledged frequently come under the cognizance of the Settlement Courts. This claim to sell the right of cultivation was always founded on the fact of the claimant having been the first plougher of the soil. It was therefore of some importance, when determining the position cultivators were to occupy, to ascertain to whom the claim of 'Buti már,' or first ploughing of the land belonged. In accordance with instructions issued on this subject by superior authority, all cultivators who could make out their claim to the 'Buti már' were recognized as hereditary cultivators, a privilege also conferred on those who had cultivated for eight years, if residents in the village, and twelve years if non-residents.

'Land, however, is so abundant and the population so scanty, that I have never found proprietors object to have their cultivators entered in any class, the latter might prefer themselves. The privilege of being a 'Maurúsí,' or hereditary cultivator, is by no means highly prized, facility of removal being the chief object aimed at. Now the idea is very prevalen[illegible] them that, by becoming hereditary cultivators, they may ultimately be made resp[illegible] I as for the Government jama in case of failure on the part of the proprietors, a belief which has probably been strengthened by the fact that Tahsíldárs, during the summary settlement, often realized from the cultivators themselves. It is not very surprising, therefore, that cases should frequently occur, in which this privilege of becoming hereditary is most [illegible]nously declined, to the despair of the proprietor, who, in the desire of his asámis to [illegible]on-hereditary, recognizes a sure indication of their being prepared to leave his vi[illegible] superior temptations shall be held out to them by his neighbours.

'If wit[illegible]ssments, proprietors are not only ready but anxious that the holdings of t[illegible] descend from father to son, how much more must they have desired this wh[illegible]rented by the Sikhs? And if the mere fact of his being the first plougher of [illegible] man to sell his tenure, what shall be said of the proposal to reduce to the statu[illegible]t-at-will a man whose ancestor not only reclaimed the soil, but met all the [illegible]ents of the proprietor when he was unable to do so himself, and who tra[illegible]s descendants as an heritable property, and who, in the assurance of their ten[illegible]d one, have expended capital in building houses and agricultural buildings'.

Mr. Wynyard, th[illegible] Officer of Ambála, who was conducting these duties so long ago [illegible]n I was Commissioner of the Jalandhar Doáb, made the following [illegible]ne of his reports :—

'309. Rights of tenants. [illegible] above that I have not experienced much difficulty in deciding the amount of rents to be paid by the tenants, but numerous and somewhat difficult cases have arisen turning on the question—who is a tenant and who is a proprietor? As I have before observed, the Sikhs made no distinctions between proprietors as a body and tenants. With the exception of one or two headmen, or favored individuals, all were treated alike; zamíndárs and asámis were alike made to pay the high rents demanded of them; nor were matters much mended under our early revenue administration. Now, however, when the khewat and khatáon are carefully read out in the village, and thoroughly explained to the people, and when they understand that the zamíndár has to pay only two-thirds of the rent, whereas the tenant has to pay the whole; in short when they understand that we acknowledge the difference between proprietors and tenants, the latter persons, who have hitherto been in as bad a position as the zamíndárs, who have not engaged for the Government revenue, think that they ought now to be placed in an equally good position, and have urgently pressed their claims to be admitted as proprietors. Each case has been tried, either by Panchayat (jury) or on its merits, and separately disposed of; many of the claims are utterly futile, and founded solely on length of possession, which, though it does give a right to continued occupancy without enhancement of rents, gives him no right whatever to a share in those rents.

'I have never failed to keep this distinction clearly before me, and to urge on the officers working with me the great difference which exists between a right to possession of land at a fixed rent and a right to hold lands paying only the share of jama due for those lands. The admission of tenants to the proprietary right is a certain way to weaken the responsibility of the brotherhood.

'310. And yet it is not easy to dismiss the claim of a man who has for years been bearing up against heavy assessments, and paying his share with the proprietary brotherhood. He is entitled to praise and consideration, but he is not entitled to another man's birthright, and I have thought it quite sufficient, if he is not one of the bhaiyáchárá, to record him as a tenant, and to fix, if he requires it for his protection, a money rental 30 per cent. in excess of the revenue rents.'

These extracts are quoted by Colonel Lake in his letter of the 26th May 1865 to the Secretary of the Government of the Panjáb. Mr. Strachey has alluded to passages in this letter. And I will only therefore read a few words in it. In paragraph 20, alluding to Mr. Wynyard's report, Colonel Lake says—

'This and other settlement reports and the experience of every officer who has enquired into the tenures of the Panjáb will bear me out in saying that, while on the one hand, property in the European sense of the term has been created by the British Government in the Panjáb, on the other hand, there are to be found in almost every village a class of persons who had been in uninterrupted occupation of their holdings, which they had transmitted, like any other heritable property from father to son, and for which either no payment was made to the so-called proprietor, or if payment was made, it was of the nature of the dues of copyhold and customary tenure in England to the lords of manors, rather than of those paid by tenants to proprietors.'

Colonel Lake, when he thus wrote, was Financial Commissioner of the Panjáb, in which he had served since 1846, and is justly eulogized by the Lieutenant Governor as one of the ablest and best officers in the province. He was employed in making settlements of the land-revenue in that year, when the Jalandhar Doáb and Kangra District were ceded to the British Government by the Sikh Power.

Then again, if I turn to the schedule prepared either by Mr. Prinsep himself or under his direct authority, and which is signed by him, showing the relations existing between landlord and tenant as reduced to a set of rules, showing the main classes of tenants, the rights and usages prevailing, and when exceptions are allowed to oppose the usage in each class, what do I find? I find that there are recorded no fewer than thirty-eight conditions, under which the cultivator is exempted wholly, or in part, from eviction. I will enumerate a few of them.

'(1). Provided occupant has not exercised the powers attending absolute ownership on improvements, such as sinking wells, planting gardens, &c.

'(2). If the person is merely occupying for an absentee or for some proprietor, not in possession of his share or rights, and a claim is made by latter for restitution, and intermediate outlay has been incurred, then compensation for losses must be paid before the occupancy of such shareholders can be disturbed.

'(4). Provided the occupancy did not arise out of an order of a Kárdár or of a Jágírdár, or ruler of the day.

'(5). Or that the land was not made over for cultivation as unto an ordinary tenant, with permissive occupancy by the so-called landowner, who has never previously exercised power of grant, lease, exchange of fields, or eviction.

'(12). Provided that the tenant did not originally reclaim the land from waste.'

Thus it appears to me clear from this evidence and much more which might be adduced, that various classes of cultivators had beneficial interests in the land in the Panjáb under Native rule, and that it is sound policy that we should define and maintain these interests, placing them on a secure basis. It is this which the proposed law now under consideration aims at. It is a fair and wise compromise between conflicting interests of great magnitude, on which the prosperity of the Province largely depends.

Mr. Prinsep is of opinion that as regards the rights and position of tenants in particular, the enquiries of the Settlement Officers were insufficient, and that whenever it would appear that he had been twelve years in possession of his land, he was recorded as an hereditary cultivator with rights of occupancy. But from the quotations I have made, as well as from the settlement papers generally, it is abundantly evident that the Settlement Officers knew what they were doing. If mistakes were made, and I have no doubt that such was the case, the proprietors of land and their representatives, the village headmen, had only themselves to blame. The Native officers who prepared the village papers went into a village or collected the village-accountants and elders, and took down from the former in presence of the latter all the particulars regarding the lands, and classified accordingly the village-measurements. Where there was no dispute, no contest, the returns were filled up at once, and signed by the patwárí and lumberdárs. Where disputes arose, they were disposed of or referred to superior authority. When the records of a village were completed, a proclamation was, if I recollect right, put up in the village hostelry calling on dissatisfied parties to appear and make their complaints. These settlement operations went on in the same district for months and even for years, during which time appeals were open to the Commissioner of the Division.

As I have before said, errors may have been committed, but they were not so numerous as has been asserted. Proprietors of land in those days were content to give cultivators rights, which they did not consider it worth while to claim, but which they now desire to resume. But allowing that there were errors committed, I hold with Mr. Maine that, considering that almost in no case had the tenants in whose favor these errors were made, held for less than twelve years, and that in many instances they and their ancestors had been in possession for generations, it would have been better to have maintained what had been done. In such cases the adverse rights of the proprietor had remained dormant so long as practically to have become extinct. Surely at any rate under such circumstances, we are right to require that the burthen of proof that the tenant may be evicted should rest on the proprietor.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has cited in support of his arguments against the tenant the writings of Sir Charles Metcalfe and Mountstuart El[illegible]. There are few names which I hold in greater reverence than t[illegible] two statesmen. But with deference to His Excellency, I do not [illegible] quite understood the circumstances under which Sir Charles Metcalfe e[illegible] celebrated opinion to which reference has so often been made. I am [illegible] that it was never intended to bear against the cultivator. Sir Charles M[illegible] was at that time Resident at Dehli, and from long personal experience and [illegible]derable knowledge of the landed tenures in the Dehli territory, I can say with confidence that there were no large proprietors there. The lands were held by village communities, by co-parceners forming brotherhoods, descended from common ancestors. Probably ninety-nine out of a hundred of these proprietors were mere yeomen or even peasants. Most of them were Játs in race, holding their lands on tenures closely resembling those of the Panjáb. The only difference between these yeomen and those of a large part of the Panjáb was one of religion. In the Dehli territory they are generally Hindús: in the Panjáb they have become Sikhs and Muhammadans. So far from an aristocratic state of things existing near Dehli, the social condition of these yeomen is essentially republican. These famous village municipalities which Sir Charles Metcalfe had in mind, when he wrote, were then, as they are now, in a more perfect condition than those in the Panjáb, because the Native government had not interfered with them.

Then as regards Mountstuart Elphinstone, no doubt he intended to describe the ancient system which prevailed in India, regarding which his account was accurate. But in Western India, of which he had most knowledge, the village commonal system had generally disappeared. In that part of India, we constantly find it asserted that there is no proprietary right among the people at all. There it has often been affirmed that the land belongs to the State, and I believe that as a rule no third party intervenes between the Government and the cultivator of the soil. No doubt there are here and there petty Mírásí proprietors, but these are quite exceptional. They are the remnants of the great mass of proprietors who have long been swept away. Although no doubt to a great extent the authorities deal with these cultivators as if they were proprietors, allowing them to engage directly for the land-revenue for their several occupancies, nevertheless there seems no common bond of union among those of the same village, and if they refuse to pay the enhanced rent or revenue demanded, or lay claim to the waste lands within the area, in the first case they would be liable to ejectment, and in the other the claim would be denied. On this side of India, everywhere a considerable margin between rent and revenue is allowed, which in most cases accrues to the proprietor; in Western India, as I understand the matter, either the State takes that difference in the shape of increased revenue, or what is probably the case, it is divided between the State and the cultivator.

In Western India it is notorious that during the period which elapsed from the time of the wars of Aurungzebe in the Dekkhan and Central India to the close of the Pindárí and Mahratta depredations, nearly all the proprietary rights in the soil were swept away, and the mass of the people destroyed, so that the land to a great extent lay waste until things were restored by the peaceful influence of British rule.

On this side of India, I refer more especially to the Upper Provinces, whether it was from the innate force and vigour of the mass of the people, and their capacity for uniting in self-defence, things were different: the proprietary rights in the land, though no doubt often assailed, and even often usurped, were more generally maintained; and when usurped, the village communities kept together, and from time to time asserted their rights. But it is equally certain that these rights were not absolute, and that the Government of the day maintained its right to take as much revenue as it could possibly realise, and to interfere with a high hand even with the landed tenures. It is only under British rule, and mainly from the date of the now much decried settlements of 1832 and 1833, that a real limitation on the demands of the State has been fixed, and a reasonable margin in the shape of rent has accrued to the proprietors of the land.

In this Bill the Committee have dealt with the matter in a fair and liberal spirit. They have not declared and confirmed the interest of the proprietor to the exclusion of those of the cultivator, nor have they treated the proprietor as if he were a mere incumbrancer on the land, the right to which was really vested in the ryot. That is the right way of settling the question. The Government has a right to deal with it. The Government has sacrificed revenue in reducing assessments on land. They have thus created rent where none previously existed. We have a right to apportion the property so created, and if the present Bill is passed, we shall give the proprietors a large share of that property, while leaving to the cultivator a sufficient reward for his labour."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL then moved that the whole of section 2, clause 2, be omitted; and

That for section 6, the following be substituted:—

"Every other tenant whose name appears in the records of a regular or revised settlement of land revenue sanctioned by the Local Government, as having a right of occupancy in land which he or the person from whom he has immediately inherited, has continuously occupied from the entry of his name or the name of such person (as the case may be) in such settlement, shall be presumed to have a right of occupancy in the land so occupied, unless, during the progress of any subsequent settlement of the revenue of such land he admits, in the presence of the Officer employed in making such settlement, or before any Officer authorized to attest the entries in the record of the same, that he is liable to be evicted at the will of his landlord, and such admission is recorded by the Officer so employed or authorized, or unless the landlord establishes in a regular suit that the tenant's right of occupancy was recorded through a mistake of fact or without the consent of the landlord, and contrary to the custom prevailing in the District wherein such land is situate within forty years previous to the institution of such suit."

He said:—"I propose with your Excellency's permission to put before the Council in one motion the first two amendments, of which I have given notice, as both are founded on the same ground of objection to the Bill, viz., that it purports to assign to the registration of certain rights in property, a degree of authority in regard to the validity of such rights which I believe to be without precedent in previous legislation.

By the letter of the Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department, dated the 31st March 1849, addressed to the Board of Administration of the Panjáb, the Courts of that Province were enjoined to proceed in or unless the landlord establishes in a regular suit that the tenant's right of occupancy was recorded through a mistake of fact or without the consent of the landlord, and contrary to the custom prevailing in the District wherein such land is situate within forty years previous to the institution of such suit."

He said:—"I propose with your Excellency's permission to put before the Council in one motion the first two amendments, of which I have given notice, as both are founded on the same ground of objection to the Bill, viz., that it purports to assign to the registration of certain rights in property, a degree of authority in regard to the validity of such rights which I believe to be without precedent in previous legislation.

By the letter of the Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department, dated the 31st March 1849, addressed to the Board of Administration of the Panjáb, the Courts of that Province were enjoined to proceed in the adjudication of matters coming before them in accordance with the spirit of the Regulations in force in the Bengal Presidency. Chief amongst those Regulations relating to land revenue settlements is Regulation VII. of 1822, and if the proceedings of the Settlement Officers of the Panjáb were governed by any law, they must be deemed to have been guided by the provisions of that enactment. By Section 1, Regulation VII. of 1822, the principal efforts of the Settlement Officers were directed to the object of 'ascertaining, settling, and recording the rights, interests, and properties of all persons and classes occupying or cultivating the land;' and by Section 9 of the same Regulation, Collectors and other Settlement Officers were enjoined, whilst making or revising a settlement of land revenue, 'to ascertain and record the fullest possible information in regard to landed tenures, the rights, interests and privileges of the various classes of the agricultural community.' For this purpose it was added, 'their proceedings shall embrace as accurate a record as possible of all local usages connected with landed tenures, as full as practicable a specification of all persons enjoying the possession and property of the soil, or vested with any heritable or transferable interest in the land or the rents of it, care being taken to distinguish the different modes of possession and property, and the real nature and extent of the interests held, more especially where several persons may hold interests in the same subject-matter of different kinds or degrees.'

By Section 14, Collectors, when making or revising settlements, were required 'in cases in which any dispute might be found to exist in regard to the nature of the tenure of any person occupying the soil, to declare in an official proceeding to be incorporated in the rúbakàrí of settlement, the nature and extent of the interest actually possessed by such occupant, referring to the denomination heretofore applied to him only as one means of proof in regard to the nature of the interest, but stating at length, with specification of any examination he may take for his satisfaction the grounds of his determination.'

It is clear from these sections, that in disputed cases only, and after full investigation of the evidence offered by both parties, the results of which examination were set forth in an official proceeding, could the Settlement Officer's action as regards the record of the rights of the occupier of the land be deemed to be in the nature of a judicial award. This award which, in the Regulation Provinces, might be set aside in a regular suit if brought within the period fixed by the law of limitation for the time being in regard to such suits, was in the Panjáb made final (subject of course to the usual appeal) by the orders of Government, dated 1st September 1849.

Any other record of rights and interests in the land under settlement amounted to no more than a simple registration entitled to a certain degree of weight as evidence pro tanto of the subject-matter comprised in it, or (to use the words of the Regulation) admissible 'only as one means of proof in regard to the interest' evidenced by it, but conclusive of the validity of the rights recorded only so far as it could be shown to represent the true facts of the case as regards the existence of the rights recorded at the time of settlement and their prescription by local usage.

I am aware, Sir, that in laying down this position in regard to the state of the law applicable to the record of tenant-rights at the time of settlement, I am stating an apparent contradiction to the statement made by the Hon'ble and learned member opposite (Mr. Maine) on a point on which he is necessarily far more competent to speak authoritatively; but, if I rightly understood the Hon'ble member, his assumption that every record of rights and interests in the land made at the time of settlement in the Panjáb, obtained under the orders of Government in regard to settlement-awards in that Province the force of a decree of Court, was founded not upon his own construction of the law, but upon the supposed opinion of the Chief Court to that effect. I think that my Hon'ble friend was in error in attributing such an expression to the Chief Court. I have before me a copy of the Court's minute on the subject of this Bill, and I will read to the Council an extract therefrom. 'The Court in stating the facts of the case as regards the extent to which the special orders of regular suit, (1), that other tenants of the same class have, within 30 years previous to the institution of such suit, been ordinarily evicted from their holdings; or (2), that the tenant in whose favour the right of occupancy was recorded, has voluntarily admitted in the presence of a Settlement Officer that he is not entitled to the right so recorded.

The result of this provision, as I understand its effect in regard to the landlord's second ground of resistance to the presumption raised by the record in his tenant's favour, will be that, whilst every admission of the incorrectness of his previously recorded status made by the tenant during the revision of settlements made prior to this Bill becoming law, will possibly be upheld by it, and the reliability and credibility of such admissions or proofs of the incorrectness of the former settlement records thereby acknowledged, the rectification of errors in other such records in future revisions of settlements will be absolutely barred; for the Settlement Officer must, in future, presume the correctness of the record and the validity of the recorded right of occupancy until the contrary be proved.

From admissions of his not being entitled to a right of occupancy made by the tenant in former revisions of settlements, the landlord can only derive benefit [illegible] successful regular suit; and the insertion of the word 'voluntarily' in [illegible] I cann[illegible]hich provides this ground, is calculated to suggest a vexatious with which [illegible] tenant and to impose an unreasonable burden of proof on the [illegible]terized by an[illegible] law [illegible] the a[illegible]refore, in the cases in which admissions of the incorrectness of when [illegible] have been made during the revision of settlements in the extra[illegible]n, and which the landlord may succeed in substantiating in a been c[illegible]ced to the single ground of resisting the status accorded ing la[illegible]cord by proof in a regular suit that other tenants of the [illegible] ordinarily evicted within thirty years previous to the institi[illegible]he Bill.

I have already [illegible]

It seemed to [illegible]nd of resistance left to the landlord is in no small degree [illegible] 1833 were th[illegible] the term 'ordinarily,' which is so indefinite as necessarily to raise a question most difficult to determine, and which is certain to be variously interpreted, viz., what number of evictions must be proved to establish a fair rebuttal of the presumption in the tenant's favour?

Moreover the period within which such evictions must have been effected, fixed by the Bill, is calculated to make the clause in all probability almost, if not wholly, inoperative; for, it is generally admitted that since the establishment of British rule in the Panjáb, ejectments of tenants have not occurred, and that for several years previous to the annexation, the state of the country was so disturbed, and the difficulty of procuring cultivators was so great, that their ejectment in any circumstances at that time was hardly to be expected.

Practically, therefore, the Bill sets up an almost absolute right of occupancy in favour of the tenant to whom such right has been assigned in the record of former settlements, save in the cases in which, at the time of the revision of those settlements, the right has been disowned by the tenant.

Is such legislation justified by the circumstances of the case as regards these records of former settlements so far as they are known? For, what are the circumstances of the case? Why, in the course of the revision of those settlements which has been going on for the last five years, in the Amritsar Division alone, out of about 60,000 cultivators who were recorded at the former settlement as having a right of occupancy, no less than 19,000 (or nearly one-third of the whole number so recorded), admitted that they were mere tenants-at-will. I put out of account altogether the large additional number of disputed cases in which the revising Settlement Officers held that the status of a right of occupancy had been wrongly conferred in the former settlement, and I submit that the undisputed results of the revision of the former record of tenant rights, so far as it has gone, prove clearly, if other evidence was wanting, that numerous mistakes were made in the preparation of the former settlement records.

The law under which those records were prepared required that they should contain a faithful representation of the rights and interests in land, as they existed at the time of settlement, it is abundantly evident, however, from the reports of the Settlement Officers written at the time of the former settlements, that the rights of occupancy then recorded were created by the settlement, for the most part, on the purely arbitrary test of an actual occupancy for twelve years or upwards, and that previous to that settlement, such rights had no recognized existence.

In proof of this, I will send to the Council extracts from those reports, and first I will quote the statement of the Hon'ble mover of this Bill, who conducted the first settlement of the Jalandhar district. In paragraph 207 of his report of that settlement, Mr. Temple stated that 'the rights of occupancy apart from proprietary rights were unknown. * * * The Government may have partially recognized it, but the people did not; however long a patch of land may have been occupied, the proprietor would at his pleasure resume it without ceremony, and the cultivator would resign it without demur.' Again, in paragraph 298,—'it was not attempted to fix any terms of occupancy which should per se entitle a cultivator to rank as hereditary, but it will be found that cultivators who have been in possession of the same field for 13 years and upwards, have at the present settlement generally been vested with hereditary rights;' and in paragraph 302,—"the distinction between hereditary and [illegible] record hereditary cultivator is not indigenous to this part of the country. [illegible] land under introduced by the settlement.' [illegible] doubt. The

Mr. Davies, in his settlement report on the Gurdaspúr [illegible]cer to record graph 25, stated that,—'a right of heritable occupancy has be[illegible]rests, apply as large proportion of the cultivators of the tahsíl: the title is c[illegible]time of making ed on a prescription from 12 to 20 years.' [illegible] in the section [illegible] to show that

In Mr. Cust's report of the settlement of Shakargarh, a [illegible] settlement was Gurdaspúr district, it is stated (paragraph 36),—'the status o[illegible]uring the pre- cultivators, or tenants with right of occupancy, was created [illegible] as elsewhere by the Settlement Officer; it was defined to be c[illegible]ll be shown by plot for 12 years uninterruptedly accompanied by residence [illegible]eeding or record or uninterrupted cultivation of 20 years without resider[illegible]ce.' [illegible] that such on the settlement of the Lahore district, Mr. R. Egerton, the present Financial Commissioner of the Panjáb, wrote (paragraph 15),—'the rights of the hereditary cultivators have been entirely created under our rule. Under the Sikhs, the proprietor had always the right of ousting a tenant whenever he chose.'

It appears to me, Sir, that stronger evidence than is afforded by the foregoing extracts from the reports on the former settlements of land revenue in the Panjáb, could hardly be adduced to show that the records of those settlements so far from representing the rights and interests in land, as then existing under the prescription of local usage, were, as regards those rights and interests, framed on an arbitrary principle initiated by the Settlement Officer at the time of settlement, and that the rights of occupancy then recorded were distinctly opposed to the previously existing custom which governed the relations subsisting between landlord and tenant on the question of the permanency of the tenure under which the latter occupied his land.

Officers employed in conducting the first settlements of the Panjáb, recorded the fact, as the result of their enquiries, that under the Sikh rule evictions of tenants by the landlords were commonly allowed and made, and this statement was recorded, it should be remembered, at a time when the question now at issue excited no interest whatever, and men's minds consequently were necessarily free from any possible bias in the matter.

The principle on which rights of occupancy were allowed for the record of former settlement, which rights, as I have already shown, are almost absolutely validated by the provisions of this Bill, i.e., the fact of a continuous occupancy for twelve years or any other arbitrarily fixed period is wholly consistent with section 9 of the Bill; and this inconsistency deprives the proposed legislation of any support from what might otherwise have been cited as the analogous conditions on which rights of occupancy were conferred on the tenant by Act X of 1859.

Lastly, I have to draw the attention of the Council to the manifestly partial spirit of the provisions of this Bill towards the interests of the tenant as evidenced by section 8. After exhausting in the previous category of tenants having a right of occupancy, every known ground on which a shred of a claim on the part of a tenant to maintain a right of occupancy against landlord could be supposed to exist, the Bill goes on to provide in this section that if the tenant can set up any other ground of claim, he shall not be precluded from doing so. The benefit of a recognized local custom ignored when the landlord's interests were at stake, is thus conceded to the tenant.

No doubt it will be said that this provision was introduced at the suggestion of the Committee of Officers of the Panjáb, assembled at Murree for the purpose of considering and reporting on this Bill; the fact is, however, that the Murree Committee proposed this section merely as a rider to a section which they desired to substitute for the existing section 6, and which, if adopted, would have secured in the manner contemplated by my amendment the recognition of local custom as a ground of rebutting the presumption raised in the tenant's favor by the settlement record. That Committee in their proposals were manifestly actuated by a sincere desire to do justice to both parties. The majority of the Committee readily accepted so much of the proposition as would subserve the interests of the tenant, but rejected its counterpoise in favor of the landlord.

I cannot conclude these remarks without expressing the regret and surprise with which I heard the proceedings of the revising Settlement Officers characterized by an Hon'ble member opposite (Mr. Strachey) as 'monstrously illegal.' I have already stated my own conclusions as to the authority of the existing law [illegible] the alteration of the record of tenant-rights by the Settlement Officer when [illegible] in revising the settlement. I will now read to the Council an extrac[illegible] Minute of the Chief Court of the Panjáb, which has already been c[illegible] aine as authoritative in laying down the state of the existing la[illegible] lates the proceedings of the Settlement Courts of that Provi[illegible] he Bill.

It seemed to [illegible] its Minute, the Court remarks as follows:—

1833 were th[illegible] ed that Mr. Prinsep had full warrant of law for correcting errors and omissions in the [illegible] f the previous settlements, but the question has arisen as to the legal force and effect of his proceedings when taken and recorded.'

That is the opinion, Sir, of the highest Court of the Province in which the Settlement Commissioner was employed as to the perfect legality of his taking cognizance of the errors of the record framed at the former settlement. I submit, therefore, that the imputation which has been made in this Council on the character of the Settlement Officers' proceedings was not warranted by the facts of the case; I agree with His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in the remarks which fell from him on this subject. I hold that in any case such remarks in this Council are ill-advised as calculated to harass zealous and conscientious public servants in the faithful discharge of their duties. Moreover in the present case, it cannot be unknown to Hon'ble members, who have perused the printed papers on the subject of this Bill, that the Settlement Commissioner at the very outset of his proceedings, earnestly solicited an expression of the views of Government in regard to the question of amendment of the settlement record, and that he thereafter continually pressed the subject upon the attention of Government. The Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb in his Minute has expressly and emphatically accepted the responsibility of the Settlement Commissioner's proceedings, even if those proceedings had been unauthorized by the existing law, any personal censure on that officer could not have been justified.

It has been charged against the Settlement Officers that they have fomented public agitation on the subject of rights of occupancy, which subject had no real or deeply-felt interest to the people when left to themselves. That this imputation is ill-founded I hold to be conclusively proved by the following extract from the Lieutenant Governor's Minute, dated 10th February 1868:—

'Para. 15. * * * * For many years past, the conviction which has urged Mr. Prinsep so persistently and warmly to urge the necessity for a change—the conviction, viz., that the existing state of things was rapidly undermining all good feeling between the most important classes of the agricultural population—has strongly impressed itself on those of our officers who are most careful to enquire into the feelings of those about them * * *.'

The Hon'ble MR. MAINE said that it was not he who had spoken of the "monstrous illegality" of the proceedings of the Settlement Officers. He did not deny that those proceedings had some colour of legality. His objection was that the Settlement Officers had not observed the procedure prescribed by law, and had revised the settlement record not upon complaint, but officiously and of their own motion. As to the observations of his Hon'ble friend (Mr. Cockerell) on the effect of investing the first Settlement Officers with judicial powers, Mr. Cockerell had apparently taken for a legal argument what was intended to be an argument of another kind. Mr. MAINE never intended to say that a mere entry on the first settlement record constituted the matter described res judicata. It was plain upon the orders of Government that no such effect was intended. But Mr. MAINE had dwelt on the moral guarantee implied in bringing courts of justice to the doors of the people at the moment when rights were under investigation, and opening those courts for the establishment or rebuttal of occupancy-rights in disputed cases. He had meant to say that every decision of those courts must have disposed of hundreds of cases on all forms with the point decided. It was not necessary for him to discuss his Hon'ble friend's amendment at any length, since he had unwittingly anticipated what appeared to him the proper reply. On the operative part of the amendment, he had, however, to say, first, that he did not completely understand what was meant by making "mistake of fact" a ground of rebuttal. He could only say generally that he objected to opening mistakes of fact after such a lapse of time. The next words introduced by his Hon'ble friend were apparently intended to obviate the difficulty felt by Mr. Cockerell as to the effect of the word "voluntarily" in section 6 of the Bill in casting the burden of proof on the landlord. Mr. MAINE held on the principle that no one can be forced to prove that which is wholly beyond the range of his knowledge, it would be for the tenant to show that the admission which he was proved to have made was not voluntarily given. To the last word proposed by his Hon'ble friend Mr. MAINE would not have objected but for the ideas which appeared to be entertained by the Punjab Settlement Officers as to the nature of a custom. Primâ facie it was [illegible] Regulation proper that the presumption created by the entry on the record [illegible] shown by [illegible] able by establishing a custom of eviction. But when Mr. MAINE [illegible] or record [illegible] officers coupling the assertion of the existence of a custom with the admission that there was no known instance of the exercise of the customary right, he could not help thinking that the introduction of the term would be dangerous. It was safer to require the landlord, as the Bill required him, to prove the practice which every court of justice would compel him to prove as the foundation of a custom in the legal sense.

His Excellency the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF said:—"With reference to Mr. Cockerell's final remarks, I should like to put a question to my Hon'ble friend Sir Richard Temple. During the debate on these amendments, I have been advised that there was a condition in the former settlement to the effect that tenants thereby declared to have a right of occupancy were only to have that right subject to alteration or revision if, on further examination, any such change appeared to be required. If this were so, a great deal turned upon an important point. It was said that the decisions of the officers on the original Panjáb settlement assume the weight of judicial decisions. But if my information be correct, the greatest doubt must be thrown on the inferences drawn by my Hon'ble friends, Mr. Maine and Mr. Strachey. When the conditions of section 7 of the Regulation of 1822 are considered, it appears that they hang strangely together with the information I have received, and almost prove the latter to be free from error. What I want to know is whether those tenants were warned of the possible alterability of their tenures, and if so, whether this were done in the pursuance of any rules for the guidance of the Settlement Officers? Had I had more time, it would have been possible for me to have ascertained by reference to the rules under which the Settlement Officers had acted. But it would be recollected that the revised Bill and Report had only been for four days in the hands of Hon'ble members. If the information is declared to be incorrect in which my question is based, I should like to be favoured with documentary authority."

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE:—"I have no hesitation in denying positively that there was any such condition in the former settlement. There was such a practice in the Central Provinces, but it never existed in the Panjáb."

His Excellency the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF asked Sir Richard Temple to produce any books in support of his denial, observing that a great deal of doubt had been thrown to-day on the value of oral evidence.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE observed that anonymous information was also open to doubt. On ordinary principles some primâ facie case should be made out before Sir R. Temple was called upon to prove a negative.

After some further conversation, the PRESIDENT interposed and the debate proceeded.

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE, in opposing Mr. Cockerell's amendment, said that any such modification of the terms of the Bill would open a door to the revision and reconsideration of the status of the mass of occupancy-tenants in the Panjáb; it would admit of the proprietor contesting the title of every such tenant, and would tend to throw the burden of proof on the tenant. All this, for the reasons repeatedly given, would be most objectionable.

Most of the points in Mr. Cockerell's argument had already been answered, and further reply in detail would not be needed. The main point was Mr. Cockerell's allegation that, as regards occupancy status, the settlement record had been made in mistake of fact and in opposition to custom. Now, the main fact on which the record had, in this respect, been founded, namely, twelve years' possession, was not mistaken at all, but was undeniably correct. And as to custom, no such thing in the sense intended, namely, a specific and demonstrable custom, existed in the Panjáb with respect to occupancy-right.

Then Mr. Cockerell had implied that the settlement record, excepting only the separate judicial awards, was simply a registration. But in fact it was much more than a registration; it conveyed titles to tenures and titles to land and to the interests bound up therewith. If any doubt had been cast on its validity regarding tenant-right, that doubt would be removed by the Bill.

It seemed to be supposed by Mr. Cockerell that the Regulations of 1822 and of 1833 were the only rules under which the Panjáb settlements had been made. But, in fact, there were other rules; notably the directions to Settlement Officers and the circulars of the Board of Administration, to which indeed observance was mainly paid by the Settlement Officers.

A quotation had been made by Mr. Cockerell to show that tenant-right had been "created" at the settlement. The force of this entirely depended on the meaning of "created." If it meant something not before existing, then occupancy-right had not been created, for occupancy had largely existed before. If it meant something precariously existing but now confirmed, then, in that special sense, occupancy-right might be said to have been created. But in that sense, proprietary right had also been created. In short, occupancy-right had been no more created than proprietary right.

Again, Mr. Cockerell had quoted his (Sir R. TEMPLE's) settlement report of 1850-51 to show the non-existence of occupancy-right. Hereon it would suffice to refer the Council to his (Sir R. TEMPLE's) speech of the 11th April, in which the very passages quoted by Mr. Cockerell had been quoted by Sir R. TEMPLE himself. But at the same time other passages were quoted by Sir R. TEMPLE, which showed that, though in some respects tenant-right was not acknowledged, yet that in reality it existed. It would not do to quote these passages singly; they must be taken together, so that their collective sense might be gathered. But was there anything inconsistent between this Bill and the settlement made by Sir R. TEMPLE in 1850-51? Quite the contrary; there was perfect consistency. For in truth this Bill confirmed by legislation exactly what was done at that settlement.

As to the Lieutenant Governor's opinion quoted by Mr. Cockerell, to the effect that the recognition of proprietary right engendered ill-feeling among the proprietors, this must allude to the circumstance already explained, namely, that once they were willing from natural self-interest to acknowledge tenant-right, but that now, from a change, fancied or actual, in their interest, they were sometimes disposed to repent of that acknowledgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL.—"I wish to offer some explanation in reference to a remark which fell from an Hon'ble member opposite (Mr. Maine) as to the intention of the words 'through a mistake of fact' which occur in my second amendment. It has been already stated that rights of occupancy were created at the first settlements, and for the most part on the strength of an actual twelve years' occupancy. It might easily have happened in the preparation of the record that the fact of such twelve years' occupancy was erroneously assumed,' and the words referred to have been inserted in the amendment to give the landlord the power, which is not allowed to him by the Bill, of obtaining the rectification of such errors. There was a clause in the Bill as originally drawn providing a means of setting aside any entry in the settlement record, which could be shown to be at variance with the rules laid down by the Settlement Officer, and recorded at the time of settlement; this clause was expunged from the Bill at the suggestion of the Murree Committee in the propriety of which I fully concurred; for, whilst it had the specious appearance of serving the landlord's interest, by its admitting of the correction of such mistakes in the proceedings of the Settlement Officer as that to which I have referred, inasmuch as it is nearly certain that, as a matter of fact, no rules in regard to the record of tenant-rights were laid down by the Settlement Officer at the time of settlement, the clause would not have operated to secure the rectification of such errors as are contemplated by the terms of my amendment."

The Motion was then put, and the Council divided.

For.	A
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.	His Excellency th t.
The Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell.	Hon'ble Mr. Tayl
The Hon'ble Sir G. Couper.	Hon'ble Mr. M
	Hon'ble Mr. S
	Hon'ble Sir I nsho
	Hon'ble Colonel N man.

So the Motion was lost.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL then moved that, for the third ground of enhancement in section 11, the following be substituted:—

"That in the case of a tenant belonging to any of the classes specified in clause 2, 3, or 4, of section 5 or section 6, the rate of rent paid by him is, if he belong to any of the classes specified in clause 2, 3, or 4 of section 5, more than 30 per centum, and if he belong to the class specified in section 6, below the rate of rent usually paid in the neighbourhood by tenants of the same class not having a right of occupancy for land of a similar description and with similar advantages.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall enhance his rent to the amount claimed by the plaintiff, not exceeding such rate or not exceeding such rate less 30 per centum, as the case may be."

He said that the amendment had two objects,—

1*st.*—To remove from the third ground of enhancement in section 11 of the Bill, the tenants whose status was described in clause 1, section 5;

2*nd*—To admit of the enhancement of the rent of tenants having a right of occupancy under section 6, to the full amount paid by tenants of the same class having no such right of occupancy.

It would be observed that the tenants described in clause 1, section 5, already paid the full amount of Government revenue assessed upon the land in their occupancy, plus the village cesses, whatever they might be; and it was stated on the authority of the officers of the Panjab who constituted the Murree Committee, that tenants without rights of occupancy did not pay rent in excess of double the rate of the Government revenue. Hence the amount already paid by the class of tenants above-mentioned was already in excess (to the extent of the amount of the village cesses) of the higher amount to which they could be subjected under the operation of the Bill. Such being the case, the provision in the Bill in regard to this class of tenants was mere surplusage, and might well be omitted.

In regard to the tenants obtaining a right of occupancy under section 6, he Mr. COCKERELL submitted that there was no ground whatever for the share of the fair rent of the land in their occupancy which it was proposed to assign to them. To give to this inferior class of tenants a quasi-proprietary interest in the land occupied by them was to go far beyond the privilege conferred by Act X of 1859, on tenants whose status was created simply bya continuous occupancy of 12 years. The validation of the right to retain the occupancy of land without the consent of the owner had been defended by the assertion of the expediency of upholding the former settlement record; but that record guaranteed no beneficiary status in the matter of rent, and the provision in this Bill, which accorded such interest, was, in his (MR. COCKERELL's) opinion, wholly indefensible.

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY:—"The first portion of the Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell's proposed amendment would affect the class of tenants described in the first clause of the 5th section of the Bill,—tenants who have hitherto never paid any rent, or rendered any service to the nominal proprietor, and who have paid nothing, except the land-revenue to the Government and the village cesses. I think, Sir, that in regard to this class of tenants, my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Cockerell, is, up to a certain point, right in saying that section 11 of the Bill will be inoperative, and that there will be no means of enhancing their rent. But this will only be true in cases in which the Government revenue amounts to half the rent. My Hon'ble friend may be correct in the assumption that, as a general rule, the Government demand will not be less than this amount, but we have no right to take it for granted that this will be always true. It is not only possible, but it is extremely probable, that the Government revenue may sometimes be less than this proportion, and in such cases the rent of the tenant can be enhanced. I confess, however, that personally I should have been very glad if this class of tenants had been treated differently, and I should have desired, on other grounds than those stated by Mr. Cockerell, to protect them against any enhancement of rent. It must be remembered that these people have hitherto paid no rent at all, and have rendered no services to the landlord. I have always thought it to be a serious blot on this Bill that they should be treated as tenants-at-all. They have been, to all intents and purposes, proprietors, and I can see no reason why they should not have been considered under-proprietors, as they would have been in Oudh, with complete rights of property in their holdings.

With regard to the other classes of tenants with rights of occupancy, the limitations put on their rents by the Bill are admitted to be arbitrary. No reason can, I believe, be given for preferring the particular figures stated in the Bill to others that might be proposed, but there has been a very general concurrence of opinion that it is desirable to limit the rent payable by these classes of tenants to an amount considerably less than the rack-rent payable by tenants-at-will, and I think that the allowances made by the Bill in favour of these classes cannot be considered too liberal. My Hon'ble friend, Mr. Cockerell, has, I think, omitted to remember that but for this Bill, there could have been ordinarily no enhancement of the rents payable by these classes of tenants during the whole term of settlement. Even with the advantages secured to them by the Bill, they will be decidedly worse off than they were before. Mr. Cockerell has observed that in the provinces in which Act X of 1859 is in force, a tenant with a right of occupancy may pay as high a rent as that which is paid by a tenant-at-will, and that in that Act there are no such limitations as those laid down in the present Bill. My Hon'ble friend possesses, I have no doubt, a more intimate acquaintance with the working of Act X of 1859 than any to which I can pretend, and he will, I hope, correct me if I am wrong. But it seems to me that he has forgotten one very important difference between the law that is in force in Bengal and in the Panjáb. In the former province, the courts will not give decrees for rents which are not in themselves 'fair and equitable.' The decisions of the High Court of Calcutta, in regard to such questions, are very favourable to tenants, and I doubt whether the provisions of this Bill, in regard to enhancement of the rent of tenants with rights of occupancy, will give advantages to that class equal to those given by the provisions of Act X of 1859, to which Mr. Cockerell has referred."

The Motion was then put, and the Council divided.

For.	Against.
The Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell.	His Excellency the President.
The Hon'ble Sir G. Couper.	His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.
	The Hon'ble Mr. Taylor.
	The Hon'ble Mr. Maine.
	The Hon'ble Mr. Strachey.
	The Hon'ble Sir R. Temple.
	The Hon'ble Colonel Norman.

So the Motion was lost.

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY then moved "that in section 19, the figure "(1)" and the word 'or' be omitted in lines 5 and 6, and that the clause numbered (2) be also omitted." He said—"I have failed to discover justification for this proposition, which authorizes landlords to appropriate to themselves the property of their tenants. Why these unfortunate tenants are to be selected for possible ruin, as if they were public enemies, is more than I can understand. We are deliberately declaring by this Bill that these tenants possess a heritable, and, with certain conditions, a transferable right of property in the land which they occupy. Their interest in the land may sometimes, as was shown just now in the debate on the Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell's proposed amendment [illegible] section 11, be quite as valuable as that of the landlord himself. The[illegible] have paid no rent in the past, and may be liable to no payment in th[illegible] They will sometimes be in fact proprietors of the land in everythin[illegible] and I can conceive no reason why these rights of property shou[illegible] be swept away at the will of a perhaps merely nominal landlo[illegible] we may advantageously in this matter follow the example [illegible] other countries have given to us. My Hon'ble friend, M[illegible] [illegible]red to the enfranchisement of copy-holds in England, an[illegible] [illegible]as been more than once noticed in the papers that have been [illegible] Council. It seems to have been thought by some that this Bil[illegible] [illegible]rinciple similar to that which has been acted upon in regard to [illegible]res in England."

There could hardly be a more complete [illegible] [illegible]he Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb has more than once sa[illegible] [illegible] Financial Commissioner has stated the same in a passage which I hav[illegible] [illegible]y read to the Council, that the position of the English copyholder to some extent resembled that of our tenants with rights of occupancy. Measures have been taken to relieve the copyholder from the obligations under which he stood to the lord of the manor, but the clause in this Bill to which I am now objecting proposes the exact converse of the measures that have been adopted in England. It proposes, as a learned friend of mine very justly observed, not to enfranchise the copyholder but to enfranchise the lord.

It would, I think, have been altogether proper if the Bill had given power to the hereditary occupier of the land to buy out the rights of the landlord.

A remark to this effect was made by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Taylor. His Excellency Sir William Mansfield has spoken as if Mr. Taylor had made a somewhat extravagant proposition, but it seems to me that Mr. Taylor really did no more than give his approval to a principle which has been fully accepted and acted upon in England and in other countries of Europe.

My Hon'ble friend, Sir Richard Temple, in his speech on the motion to take this Bill into consideration, spoke as if His Honor the Lieutenant Governor had approved the clause to which I am now objecting. But if I understand His Honor's views correctly, I doubt very much whether he would think it right that this clause should become law, unless further provisions were added for the protection of the tenant. For I find that in remarking on a section in Mr. Brandreth's original Bill, similar in effect to this clause, the Lieutenant Governor stated his opinion that a section ought to be added, giving power to the tenant to buy out the rights of the landlord, if an enhanced rent were demanded from him. If this proposition had been adopted, the effect would have been highly beneficial to the tenants, and it would have added materially to the value of their interests in the land.

I desire also to call the attention of the Council to the remarks on this subject made by the Lieutenant Governor in his Minute of the 13th September 1866. He there said, speaking of certain classes of tenants with rights of occupancy:—'This class of persons, it seems to me, should be regarded very much in the same light as 'copyholders' in England. Those only can claim this last-named designation whose names have appeared on the court roll 'time out of mind,' and, although this period of incumbency can be claimed by but few in this province, the class to which I refer appears to me to occupy here a very analogous position to the copyholder of England. * * Five statutes at least have been enacted during the present reign to enable copyholders to enfranchise their tenures, or convert them into free-holds, and it would, I think, be exceedingly desirable to hold out similar facilities to this highest class of tenants or sub-proprietors in this country to purchase for themselves the status of proprietors in full.'

This is exactly what I maintain would have been the proper course to follow. Sir Richard Temple spoke as if he believed that if this clause became law, it would remain almost a dead letter. This may be true, but it would not therefore cease to be mischievous. We should have upon the statute book a recognition by the Legislature of a false principle, and one that has been recognized hitherto by no law in any country of which I have ever heard.

I think it very objectionable that the law should seem to encourage the belief that it is desirable to get rid of tenants having permanent interests in the land, and to substitute for them tenants-at-will, liable to ejectment as the landlord may arbitrarily please, and whose rents are limited neither by law nor custom, but depend only on competition. I protest against any legislation which tends to abolish a tenure which is economically good, and to substitute for it a tenure which is economically bad.

When the sacrifice of private interests is necessary for the public benefit, the sacrifice must of course be made. In the present instance, it is proposed to authorize by law an infringement of private rights, not only with no pretence that this is necessary for the public good, but, as it seems to me, in violation of the obvious requirements of public policy."

The Hon'ble Mr. TAYLOR,—"In seconding the motion of Mr. Strachey, I have nothing to add to what I have already said on the subject of the clause to which it relates, except to express my entire concurrence in the objections which my Hon'ble friend has advanced against the novel, and, as it seems to me, unjust principle it seeks to introduce.

I must, however, take the opportunity of saying that Mr. Strachey has exactly stated the position which I advocated in regard to the rights belonging to the proprietor and the hereditary cultivator respectively in relation to the land. He has very correctly explained the real scope and effect of my proposal to enfranchise the restricted tenure of the ryot, a proposal upon which His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has put an interpretation which my words were certainly not intended to convey. Nothing can be further from my wish than to weaken or destroy proprietary right, or, as Sir W. Mansfield expressed it, 'to improve the landlord off the face of the land.' On the contrary, my desire is, and always has been, to 'comfort' tenures, and to strengthen rights in land wherever they are found to exist.

I repeat that I regard the tenant-right of the registered cultivator, the occupancy-ryot, or other hereditary holder of land throughout India, as that of co-proprietorship: he shares the proprietary right with the Government in those parts of the country where the direct ryotwary system is in vogue, and he shares it elsewhere with the proprietor, whoever he may be, who is recognized by Government, and to whom he pays the rent. I understand Sir William Mansfield to maintain that this co-proprietary tenure should be destroyed by degrading the hereditary occupier into a tenant-at-will; whereas I contend that it is for the advantage of all parties, and of the country generally, that the restricted tenure of the industrious farmer of the land should be enfranchised in the manner I have described, by the payment of a fine, or compensation to his co-proprietor.

Nor am I unmindful of the superior tenures such as mírásí and others, which exist in some parts of India, to which His Excellency has alluded. In the Minute from which I have already quoted, and which is now before me, I find that I stated several years ago when discussing the various interests connected with the land in India as follows:—'Speaking, generally, the interests of the cultivating or village communities of India are of two kinds,—the first is a transferable interest, constituting a perfect right of property, and is derived from a grant of the sovereign power, whether of a special individual character or consisting of a more general concession in favor of the whole body of cultivators. Of this description are the mírásí tenures in parts of Southern and Western India, where the village communities have claimed from time immemorial the possession of a transferable right of property in the soil.' This description of tenure, though it has very generally disappeared, is still in existence in one small district of the Madras Presidency, and I believe, also in parts of Bombay; and wherever it exists, the rights of the mírásídárs in the waste, as well as in the cultivated, lands are strictly respected by the Government, and they dispose of both by transfer or sale at will. In most other parts of the Empire, this transferable interest is not enjoyed by the registered cultivators, and the proposal which I have ventured to advocate is that they should be allowed to purchase this right as regards the cultivated lands in their possession."

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE confessed himself unable to answer Mr. Strachey's arguments about the injustice of compelling tenants of the superior classes or of very old standing to be bought out. But as regards the rest of the occupancy-tenants, the arrangement would be fair enough. He would oppose Mr. Strachey's general amendment, on the understanding that, if it were lost, he (Sir R. TEMPLE) would propose a subordinate amendment, to the effect that tenants of the superior classes and of very old standing should be exempted from the liability to be compulsorily bought out.

His Excellency the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF:—"When I read this section, I imagined that there had been for the moment a feeling of compunction towards the landlord. It seemed to me that in framing it, a sentiment of compassion had actuated the Committee—a sentiment developing itself in an equitable provision, for it can hardly be denied that this Bill is an occupants' Bill with the single exception of this section, which my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Strachey, would now wish to sweep away. I may cite in support of my opposition to this amendment the opinion of the experienced gentleman who lately officiated as Secretary in the Foreign Department, and is known to be a very staunch advocate of the principles favoured by the Bill.

He says,—

'Although I am in favour of the principle of empowering landlords to buy out hereditary tenants, and the hereditary tenants to buy up the landlord's right under certain fixed conditions, &c., &c.'

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY:—"His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has quoted the opinion of Mr. Aitchison in favour of this clause of the Bill; but I wish to point out that this opinion was qualified to so great an extent by Mr. Aitchison himself that I am, I think, fairly entitled to claim his authority in support of the views which I have advocated. 'Although,' he said, 'I am in favour of the principle of empowering landlords to buy out hereditary tenants, and hereditary tenants to buy up the landlord's right, under certain fixed conditions, I strongly dissent from the decision of the majority of the Committee embodied in section 22 of the amended Draft Bill. The section as it stands, without a corresponding provision in favour of hereditary tenants, is unjust. There are hundreds of men who under this Bill will be tenants with rights of occupancy, whose position differs little in reality from that of landowners. They have cultivated the land from time out of mind; they have paid no rent other than the Government revenue; they have paid revenue by bách like proprietors; they are occasionally even recorded as entitled to a share of shámilát lands in the event of partition. These men, merely from the fact of their having been regarded as tenants, whatever that may have meant at the time, will come under all the liabilities of tenants with rights of occupancy under this Bill. Over such men the landlord's right is merely potential, and it is unjust to give a preference to such potential rights over rights of a very valuable kind which have been long actually enjoyed. In such cases if the power to buy up rights is given at all, the tenant with hereditary right should have the power of ridding himself of the landowner's hold on him.'

I think, Sir, that this quotation shows clearly that if Mr. Aitchison's authority be quoted, it must be quoted in support of the views which I have maintained, and not in opposition to them."

His Excellency Sir William Mansfield has spoken as if this Bill were in the nature of a compromise, and as if having given a great deal to the tenants, we ought now to maintain this clause, which has at least the appearance of giving an advantage to the landlords. I cannot admit that such reasons as this ought to influence the Council in its decision. The real question is what is just and proper. And I wish to remind the Council that it has never been pretended by any one that this clause is in accordance with any custom that prevailed in the Panjáb before the British conquest, or with any custom that has grown up since. It is admitted to be an absolute novelty, and it seems to me to be a novelty that is thoroughly unjust and altogether opposed to public policy.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL said that as a member of the Select Committee on this Bill, he was in a position to state that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief's conclusion that the 2nd clause of section 19 was designed to be in the nature of a compromise, is perfectly correct. The necessity for some such provision as a counterpoise to the immense advantages which the Bill confers on the tenant, had been consistently maintained from the first; it was introduced into Mr. Brandreth's original Draft Bill on the ground that without it great hardship might be inflicted on the peasant proprietor who had relinquished the cultivation of his land to a tenant and had by so doing suffered adverse rights to spring up, which precluded him from re-entering on such land as an occupant, although the occupancy might be required for the support of his family. The clause stood in its present shape when the Bill after first amendment by the Select Committee was referred to the Government of the Panjáb. To cancel the provision now would be highly impolitic and unjustifiable, as it constituted the sole compensation which the proposed legislation offers to the landlord for the rights of which it deprived him.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE said that he did not intend to support the amendment, but he could not allow the Commander-in-Chief's observation that the Bill was entirely in the interest of the tenant, to pass without remark. Under clause two of section six, no less than 19,000 out of the 46,000 erasures from the settlement record, recently made by the Settlement Officers, would be sustainable; and that was independent of other grounds of rebuttal. The compromise, therefore, was on merely numerical principles, not unfair.

His Excellency the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF said that he was aware of the second sentence in Mr. Aitchison's letter, which he had read more than once. But he had also read the mass of papers which had been laid before the Council, and had been given to them as evidence of the state of things prevailing in the Panjáb prior to the annexation of that Province, and he also bore in mind the denial of rights which had been expressed by those to whom he was unhappily opposed. Now it was clear that if the alleged anarchy had swept away rights in the Panjáb at the time alluded to, that there were no records to refer to, and that there was no vestige of trustworthy custom, it was obvious that the argument held against one side as well as the other, and therefore that Mr. Aitchison's pleading might be dismissed with the other arguments about rights which it was declared were of no avail. But in fact in considering these things, we might fall back on the feeling of equity in dealing with both classes, and this it was that made him use the expressions that the Committee had drafted the section in compunction and in a spirit of compromise towards the proprietors.

The Motion was then put and the Council divided.

For.	Against.
His Excellency the President.	His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.
The Hon'ble Mr. Taylor.	The Hon'ble Mr. Maine.
The Hon'ble Mr. Strachey.	The Hon'ble Sir R. Temple.
The Hon'ble Colonel Norman.	The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.
	The Hon'ble Sir G. Couper.

So the Motion was lost.

The Hon'ble Sir GEORGE COUPER moved that in section 34, clauses 1 and 2 be omitted, and that in clause 3 for 'every other,' the word 'any' be substituted. In other words, he said that the right of alienation conferred by the section on a tenant having a right of occupancy might be struck out. The late Mr. Thomason, who was the first authoritative expounder of the great doctrine of tenant-rights of occupancy, never went so far as to say that those rights were susceptible of alienation. The 'Directions to Settlement Officers' were not at hand to refer to; but he thought His Excellency the President would bear him out when he said that those rights were therein defined to be 'hereditable but not transferable'. And the Committee which were assembled under the express instructions of His Excellency in Council to enquire into and report on the provisions of this Bill, had recorded the following opinion with reference to this section:—"with regard to the right of alienation, the Committee concur in thinking that as the power of alienation so conferred is entirely contrary to existing custom and to the existing law and records of early settelements, it is undesirable to introduce it." And the Hon'ble the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb than whom, except His Excellency the President, there was no higher authority on these matters, had remarked that the "Committee had been composed of some of our ablest and most experienced men representing various shades and diversities of opinion. They had considered all matters discussed in the Bill most fully, laboriously and conscientiously, and had, His Honour firmly believed, arrived at conclusions in consonance with the feelings of the people and the interests of justice. His Honour sincerely trusted therefore that these conclusions might be accepted."

He thought then it would not be denied, and that he might safely affirm that, up to this time, the right of alienation on the part of the tenant having a right of occupancy had never existed. By this section it would be created. Now, why should it be created? His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief had, in effect, put the same question, and was informed in reply by the Hon'ble Member who had charge of the Bill that the privilege was extended to superior classes only, and was "most strictly limited." But that was no answer; and as a matter of fact, the privilege was extended to every single tenant who was deemed by the Bill to have a right of occupancy.

He was therefore of opinion that no ground had been shown for the creation of this right in a Bill which purported to be a compromise between the claims of the respective classes of landlord and tenant, especially as its creation would be contrary to the concurrent and earnest advice of all the local officers who were best qualified to form an opinion on the subject.

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE said that the power complained of was given only to a superior class of tenants, and would be exercised subject to the right of pre-emption conferred on the landlord by the second clause of section 34.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT said that, doubtless no power of alienation was given by the Settlement Directions; but in the cases contemplated by the first and second clauses of section 34, the tenants had nearly a full proprietary right, and might fairly be allowed the power of alienation, subject to the landlord's right of pre-emption.

The Motion was then put, and the Council divided.

For.	Against.
The Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell.	His Excellency the President.
The Hon'ble Sir George Couper.	His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.
	The Hon'ble Mr. Taylor.
	The Hon'ble Mr. Maine.
	The Hon'ble Mr. Strachey.
	The Hon'ble Sir R. Temple.
	The Hon'ble Colonel Norman.

So the Motion was lost.

The Hon'ble Sir GEORGE COUPER then moved that in section 37, line 1, the words 'at will with his landlord's consent' be inserted after 'tenant,' and the words 'he or' be inserted after 'occupancy' in the second line. In dissenting from the provision that a tenant-at-will should be entitled to compensation for improvements effected without his landlord's consent, he was again merely representing the views of the Committee whose report he had before referred to, and those of the Hon'ble the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb, which he had already quoted. Moreover, the terms of the section appeared to him to involve a contradiction. For how could a man be held to be a tenant-at-will who, by the performance of an act without his landlord's consent, could compel the landlord, in his turn, to compensate him for that act before he could evict him or enhance his rent? He ceased to be a tenant-at-will. He became a tenant subject to certain conditions imposed upon his landlord by the Legislature, and he thought it inexpedient that the Legislature should interfere between man and man and impose such conditions. It might be said it would be hard that a hard-working, frugal tenant-at-will, who had expended money or labour on his holding, should be liable to eviction in order that his landlord or another might reap what he had sown. And if the section only prevented this, it might not be objectionable. But it went further, and enabled a thriftless, revengeful tenant-at-will, who had been properly evicted, to bring an action against his landlord for compensation for improvements which might never even have been made at all. It might be said that in such case, the tenant would lose and the landlord would win the suit. But under no circumstances was a lawsuit a pleasant thing. And there was nothing which a Native of rank, or even of ordinary respectability, more heartily hated than the prospect of having to undergo the risk, the anxiety, and the expense consequent on having to defend a suit. The section, as he had already said, enabled a malignant tenant-at-will to drag his innocent landlord through some portion of this dirt, that is, to entail upon him some amount at least of unnecessary risk, annoyance, and expense. Therefore he would say 'let well alone, do not interfere by legislative enactment in matters which may safely, which had best, be left to be settled by the parties concerned among themselves.' And if a tenant-at-will chooses to expend money or labour on his holding without protecting himself by an agreement, or without taking even the simple and ordinary precaution of obtaining previously the consent of the man at whose will he holds, let him abide the consequences of his own folly.'

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY:—"My Hon'ble friend, Sir George Couper, has objected to this section of the Bill entirely on general grounds. He has not asserted, nor, so far as I am informed, has it been asserted by any one that in the matter of tenants' improvements, there are special reasons why the principles laid down in the Bill should not be made applicable to the Panjáb.

Now, so far as the general principle at issue is concerned, it must be remembered that only three months ago the Oudh Rent Act was passed by this Council. The sections in the present Bill, which refer to tenants' improvements, are, with one slight alteration, in favor of the landlord taken verbatim from the Oudh Act. There is absolutely nothing in this part of the Bill which has not already received the sanction of the Legislature.

The Council is aware that every part of the Oudh Act was discussed by me and by the present Chief Commissioner and Financial Commissioner with the principal talukdárs. Although there was a great deal of controversy regarding many other parts of the Bill, I can say confidently that in regard to this question of the right of tenants to claim compensation for improvements made by them on the land, there was really no controversy at all. I well remember the most intelligent and the most influential of all the talukdárs of Oudh saying to me that he did not see how there could be any objections to such provisions as these, because it was impossible that the landlord should suffer injury from having his land improved by the tenant. I cannot understand how a reasonable landlord could come to any other conclusion.

Since my Hon'ble friend, Sir George Couper, has raised this question on general grounds, and not on grounds peculiar to India or the Panjáb, I think that he might have noticed the fact of the almost constant discussions on the subject which have been going on for several years past in the British Parliament. The question of compensation for tenants' improvements has been debated and reported on and written about to such an extent that it is really impossible to say anything new regarding it. I think that no question could be named which has been more completely argued out than this, and that this is true can hardly be better shown than by the fact that both the great parties of the State have practically agreed in regard to the principles on which the question is to be disposed of. In principle, there is hardly any difference between the Bill brought into Parliament in the last Session by the present Conservative Government and that brought in two years ago by Mr. Chichester Fortescue on behalf of the Government of which Mr. Gladstone was the head. I have not got the Bill of the present Session to refer to, but I have no doubt that I am right in saying that it allowed improvements of the character described in section 38 of the Bill now before us to be made by the tenant without the previous consent of the landlord. This principle, indeed, has been so generally admitted, that no future event can well be more certain than this, that whatever party be in power, we shall see before long an Act of Parliament giving ~~to tenants in Ireland authority~~ to make certain classes of improvements on their holdings without asking the previous consent of the landlord.

My Hon'ble friend, Sir George Couper, has spoken as if it were proposed by this Bill to place restrictions on the freedom of contract between landlord and tenant. But, in reality no such restrictions will be imposed. The landlord and the tenant will be free to enter into any agreement that they please in regard to the making of improvements. All that the Bill says is, that if no agreement has been made, it will be assumed that improvements made at the expense of the tenant have been made with the tacit consent of the landlord. It is a matter of simple justice that, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, a man shall reap the benefit of his own industry, and that the property which he has invested in the improvement of the land, without objection on the part of the landlord, shall not be liable to confiscation if the landlord chooses to commit so gross an act of injustice. My Hon'ble friend has spoken as if claims would be made to the serious injury of the landlord on account of purely imaginary improvements. My answer is that the Bill distinctly declares that no compensation shall be claimable except for bonâ fide improvements, by which the annual letting value of the land is increased; and a landlord can never be called upon to pay to a tenant a farthing more than the additional value which has been actually given to the land by the expenditure by the tenant of his own money and labour. In case of difference between the parties as to the amount of compensation to which the tenant is fairly entitled, the Bill provides that application may be made to the Court on paper bearing a stamp of eight annas, requesting that the matter may be determined. There will be no suit, and the procedure followed will be of the simplest kind possible.

I was not aware, until my Hon'ble friend's amendment was actually proposed, that it was his intention to raise this question. If I had known that this amendment was to come forward, I should have brought with me some papers which would have enabled me to lay before the Council some information of interest in regard to the manner in which even in England, where there is no written law on the subject, tenants practically obtain the benefit of improvements which they have made at their own cost. I happen, however, to have with me a book from which I should like to read a passage in illustration of what I have now said. It contains an account of a case which came before Justices Coleridge and Erle in the Court of Queen's Bench on the 26th November 1861 by way of appeal from a County Court in Derbyshire. The tenant was a yearly tenant on the terms that he should use and cultivate his farm in a good and tenantable manner according to the rules of good husbandry. The tenancy was determined by notice to quit given by the landlord, and the tenant then claimed to recover £50 for drainage works made without the knowledge or consent of the landlord. 'The custom was proved that every out-going tenant should be entitled to claim from the landlord compensation for works, though done without the landlord's knowledge or consent.' It was contended for the landlord that the alleged custom could not be supported as being unreasonable and bad. Mr. Justice Coleridge said—'It seems to me not an unreasonable custom that a tenant who is bound to use the farm in a good and tenantable manner, and according to the rules of good husbandry, should be at liberty to charge his landlord with a portion of the expense of draining the land that requires drainage according to good husbandry, though the drainage be done without the landlord's knowledge or consent.' Mr. Justice Erle said: 'if it be not unreasonable as a contract, I do not see that it is unreasonable as a custom.'

It seems to me, Sir, that these principles, which are those laid down in the present Bill, are principles of obvious justice and of universal application, and I hope that the Council will refuse to agree to the amendment that has been proposed."

The Motion was then put, and the Council divided.

For.	Against.
~~The Hon'ble Sir~~ George Couper.	All the other Hon'ble Members.

So the Motion was lost.

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY moved that in section 36, lines 4, 5, 7, 8, the words "residing in the village in which such land is situate" and "residing in the same village" be omitted, and that in line 14 for "the same village," the words "the village in which such land is situate" be substituted. He said:—

"This section, as it now stands in the Bill, is based on a decision of the Chief Court of the Panjáb, dated the 5th December last, and it may be considered to represent the view which has been taken by the highest judicial tribunal of the province in regard to the existing law which regulates the succession of hereditary cultivators to rights of occupancy. In proposing my present amendment, I am, therefore in fact, proposing to make a change in the present law, which declares that a collateral heir in the male line can only claim the right of succession if, on the death of the tenant, he is residing in the same village.

Now I do not deny that such a rule as this may formerly have been reasonable enough. When these rights of occupancy were, strictly speaking, no rights at all, and when they often consisted in the mere right to cultivate, there was perhaps nothing very unreasonable in considering that no one ought to succeed to the occupation of the land who was not present in the village and ready to carry on the cultivation. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief observed with much truth that we ought not to pay more attention to mere custom than the custom may deserve, and that we must base our legislation on more solid foundations. There can be no doubt that the courts of all civilized countries act in accordance with this principle, and refuse to recognize customs which have clearly ceased to be beneficial.

As the old legal maxim says, malus usus est abolendus. It seems to me that this maxim may be fairly applied in the present instance. For these rights of occupancy, which were formerly so vague and indefinite, have now become actual rights of property, and, as it has been shown to-day, they may sometimes be actually more valuable than the rights of the nominal proprietor of the land. The tenant may belong to the class which has never paid any rent, or rendered any services to the proprietor, but has paid the Government revenue and the village cess. In all other parts of India with which I am acquainted, these would be considered the most obvious signs of proprietorship, and indeed it is difficult to see what better signs of proprietorship could be given.

I have been assuming that the rule of succession laid down in the Bill is in accordance with the custom prevailing in the Panjáb, but in reality I do not understand the Chief Court to have asserted this, and in order that the Council may fully understand the grounds of the Court's decision, I will read a portion of the judgment to which I have referred:—'The law on the subject is contained in paragraph 128 of directions to Settlement Officers, North-Western Provinces, and Clause 13, Section XXI, Part I of the Panjáb Civil Code. The former says that 'sons or their immediate heirs residing with them in the village would succeed;' the latter that the 'next male heir or heirs will succeed to these privileges.' This language of the Code is wide enough to admit of the interpretation that the same rules apply to succession to the rights of hereditary cultivators and to succession to the rights of ownership of land, and the words 'immediate heirs' in the above quotation are rather vague; but the best authorities have held that the succession of collaterals in the male line is limited, and the only question is the extent of the limitation. There has been considerable difference of opinion upon this head, and the point is not without doubt; but the rule laid down in the above quotation from Cust's Revenue Manual, with the qualification that the collaterals must also reside in the same village as the land is situate, seems on the whole to be better supported.'

I think it will be clear from this quotation that I have really proposed no great innovation on existing customs, if indeed there be any innovation at all. I do not think that it can be maintained that when legislation on this subject has become necessary, we ought to declare that the right to succeed to a man's property shall depend on the accident, whether at the time of his death, the natural heir happens to be living in a certain place, and that if he is not living in that place, the property shall pass absolutely to a stranger. Such a law would, I think, be unreasonable and unjust, and I therefore ask your Excellency and the Council to agree to the amendment which I have proposed."

The Motion was put, and the Council divided.

For.	Against.
His Excellency the President.	The Hon'ble Mr. Taylor.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.	The Hon'ble Mr. Maine.
The Hon'ble Mr. Taylor.	The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.
The Hon'ble Mr. Strachey.	The Hon'ble Sir George Couper.
The Hon'ble Sir R. Temple.
The Hon'ble Colonel Norman.

So the Motion was carried.

His Excellency the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF said that he had taken note of Sir Richard Temple's statement with respect to the Panjáb Code having generalised the principle of adoption even in matters to which it was not previously admitted by the custom of the people. There must have been some reason for the custom being against it in this instance. His Excellency submitted that there could be no doubt that there would be great inconvenience in permitting the practice of adoption to apply to cases of succession to rights of occupancy. The Hon'ble Mr. Strachey's amendment had removed one great evil with which the law as hitherto administered had allowed succession to remain encumbered. He, the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, in a spirit of fairness to the proprietors, would now go a step further and relieve the law of another malus usus. He would therefore, with His Excellency the President's permission, move that the following explanation be added to section 36:—

"Explanation.—The words 'descendants' and 'relatives' in the former part of this section do not include adopted sons."

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE protested against limiting the right of adoption which every Hindú possessed. No distinction had ever been made, either by usage or by the courts, between the exercise of the power to adopt in cases of succession to an occupancy-right and the exercise of the same power in other cases.

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY expressed his concurrence with the Hon'ble Sir R. Temple.

The Motion was put, and the Council divided.

For.	Against.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.	His Excellency the President.
The Hon'ble Mr. Maine.	The Hon'ble Mr. Taylor.
The Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell.	The Hon'ble Mr. Strachey.
	The Hon'ble Sir R. Temple.
	The Hon'ble Colonel Norman.
	The Hon'ble Sir George Couper.

So the Motion was lost.

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE then, with His Excellency the President's permission, moved that to section 19 the following clause be added :—

"Nothing in the last preceding clause shall be deemed to apply to a tenant belonging to any of the classes described in section 5, or to a tenant when he or the person from whom he has inherited shall have continuously occupied such land for thirty years or upwards."

He said that this amendment was intended to prevent injustice arising in the manner averred, with some truth, by Mr. Strachey. If carried, its result would be that those occupancy-tenants who were of the superior classes, or of ancient standing, could not be bought out at all; and that the others, if they were to be bought out at all, must be arranged with in a reasonable brief time before they become ancient, and thereby entitled to exception.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL submitted that the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble mover of the Bill was practically the same as that just moved by Mr. Strachey, and vetoed by the Council. So far as we had any means of judging of the effect of this provision, it might be assumed that it would include very nearly, if not absolutely, the whole of the tenants comprehended by section 6. Mr. COCKERELL trusted, therefore, that the Council would not, in the present state of its information on the subject, accept the Hon'ble mover's proposal.

The Motion was put, and the Council divided.

For.	Against.
His Excellency the President.	His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.
The Hon'ble Mr. Taylor.	The Hon'ble Mr. Maine.
The Hon'ble Mr. Strachey.	The Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell.
The Hon'ble Sir R. Temple.	The Hon'ble Sir George Couper.
The Hon'ble Colonel Norman.

So the Motion was carried.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL asked His Excellency the President to re-publish the Bill, under the 29th Rule for the Conduct of Business, before the motion "that the Bill be passed" be put.

He said that he made this request because a most important amendment, the effect of which the Council had not yet had a full opportunity of considering, had been somewhat hurriedly carried at this late hour of the day, and it was highly desirable that those whose interests were most materially concerned by this change in the Bill, should have an opportunity of expressing their views on the matter before the Bill as amended became law.

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE expressed his hope that the President would not comply with Mr. Cockerell's request. The Bill was urgently needed, and there had been far too much delay already.

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY said that, so far from the Bill having been discussed too little, in his opinion it had been discussed too much. He referred, of course, not to discussions in this Council, but to the discussions that had taken place in the Panjáb. He thought that on grounds of political expediency, it was highly necessary that the Bill should become law at once.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT declined to accede to the Hon'ble Mr. Cockerell's request.

The Hon'ble Sir R. TEMPLE then moved that the Bill as amended be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned to Wednesday, the 28th October 1868.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 15th October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

Act No. XXVI of 1868.

An Act to enable Municipalities to provide for Lock-Hospitals.

Preamble.

Whereas it is expedient to enable all Municipalities in British India to provide out of the municipal funds for the maintenance of Lock-Hospitals and generally for the prevention of contagious venereal disease; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Power to Municipal Committees to devote funds to maintaining Lock-Hospitals, &c.

1. Notwithstanding anything contained in any Act of the Governor General of India in Council, of the Governor of Madras in Council, of the Governor of Bombay in Council, of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal in Council, or in any other law for the time being in force, it shall be lawful for every Municipal Corporation, Municipal Committee, or other Body of persons duly appointed to conduct the affairs of a municipality in British India to pay, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, out of the funds at their disposal towards the maintenance of the hospital provided under section twelve of Act No. XIV of 1868 (for the prevention of certain contagious diseases) within the limits of the place for which they are so appointed and towards defraying the cost of the medical treatment, lodging, clothing and food of the women detained in such hospital, and of the allowance provided under section nineteen of the same Act for the subsistence of prostitutes residing within the limits aforesaid, such part as may from time to time be agreed on by and between the Corporation, Committee or Body and the Local Government of the total cost of the said maintenance, treatment, lodging, clothing, food and allowance as annually estimated by such Government.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 21st October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

Act No. XXVII of 1868.

An Act to exempt certain Instruments from the Indian Registration Act, 1866.

Preamble.

Whereas it is expedient to exempt expressly from compulsory registration under the Indian Registration Act, 1866, certain documents heretofore or hereafter executed by or in favour of Government; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Scheduled documents exempted from Act XX of 1866.

1. Nothing contained in the said Act shall be deemed to require, or to have at any time required, the registration of any of the documents or maps comprised in the Schedule hereto annexed.

But all such documents and maps shall, for the purposes of sections forty-eight and forty-nine of the same Act, be deemed to have been and to be registered in accordance with its provisions.

Inspection and copies of scheduled documents.

2. Subject to such rules and the previous payment of such fees as the Local Government may from time to time prescribe in this behalf, all documents and maps specified in the first, second, and third clauses of the said schedule shall be open to the inspection of any person applying to inspect the same, and, subject as aforesaid, copies of such documents shall be given to all persons applying for such copies.

Copies of sanads to be filed by Registrar.

3. A copy of every document mentioned in the fourth clause of the said schedule and executed on or after the first day of May 1866, shall, in the case of every such document heretofore executed, as soon as may be after the passing of this Act, and in the case of every such document hereafter executed, as soon as may be after its execution, be sent by the Local Government to the Registrar or to every Registrar within whose district the whole or any part of the immoveable property comprised in such document is situate, and shall be filed by him in his Book 1.

This Act to be read with Act XX of 1866.

4. This Act shall be read with and taken as part of Act No. XX of 1866.

SCHEDULE.

(1). Documents issued, received, or attested by any officer engaged in making a settlement or revision of settlement of land revenue, and which form part of the records of such settlement.

(2). Documents and maps issued, received, or authenticated by any officer engaged on behalf of Government in making or revising the survey of any land, other than waste land, and which form part of the record of such survey.

(3). Documents which, under any law for the time being in force, are filed annually by patwáris or other officers charged with the preparation of village records.

(4). Sanads, inám title-deeds, and other documents purporting to be or to evidence grants or assignments by Government of land or of any interest in land, in reward for special services.

Preamble.

Whereas it is expedient to define and amend the law relating to certain matters connected with the tenancy of land in the Panjáb; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.—Preliminary.

Short title. Extent of Act.

1. This Act may be called "The Panjáb Tenancy Act, 1868," and shall extend only to the territories for the time being under the government of the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb.

Saving of decrees and of agreements between landlords and tenants.

2. Nothing contained in this Act shall affect the operation of any decree of Court under which a tenant holds or of any agreement between a landlord and a tenant, when such agreement is in writing or recorded by the proper officer in the record of a regular settlement sanctioned by the Government.

All entries in such record in respect of matters comprised in Chapters III, IV, V and VI of this Act shall, when attested by the proper officer, be deemed to be agreements within the meaning of this section.

Interpretation clause.

3. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—

"Land." "Land" means immoveable property for the time being subject to a settlement, whether regular or summary, of land-revenue;

"Rent." "Rent" means whatever is payable by an occupant of land on account of the use or occupation thereof;

"Arrear of rent." Any instalment of rent which is not paid on or before the day when the same becomes due, whether under a written agreement or according to law or local usage, shall be deemed to be, for the purposes of this Act, an arrear of rent;

"Tenant." "Tenant" means any occupant of land liable to pay rent therefor, but does not include an under-proprietor;

"Landlord." "Landlord" means any person entitled to receive rent payable by a tenant.

"Grand-father," uncle," and "grand-uncle." "Grand-father" includes the father of an adoptive father, "uncle" the brother of an adoptive father, and "grand-uncle" the adoptive father of an uncle;

"Representative." "Representative" means an heir or any other person taking by operation of law or by will a beneficial interest in the property of a deceased person.

Repeal of Book Circular No. 33 of 1860.

4. The Book Circular of the Financial Commissioner of the Panjáb, No. 33 of 1860, is hereby repealed.

CHAPTER II.—Of Rights of Occupancy.

Tenants having right of occupancy.

5. Every tenant who—

(1) has heretofore paid no rent and rendered no service, in respect of the land occupied by him, to the proprietor thereof for the time being, beyond the amount of land-revenue and village-cesses for the time being chargeable thereon, and whose father and grandfather, uncle and grand-uncle occupying the same land, have paid no rent and rendered no service in respect thereof to such proprietor, beyond the amount aforesaid.

(2) or who has involuntarily parted or shall involuntarily part with proprietary rights in any land otherwise than by forfeiture to Government; and who has continuously occupied or shall continuously occupy such land or any part thereof from the time of such parting;

(3) or who is at the date of passing this Act the representative of a person who settled as a cultivator in the village in which the land occupied by such tenant is situate along with the founders of the village;

(4) or who is or has been jágírdár of the village or any part of the village in which the land occupied by him as tenant is situate, and who has continuously occupied such land for not less than twenty years—shall be deemed to have a right of occupancy in the land so occupied.

Presumption arising from entry in settlement record.

6. Every tenant whose name appears in the records of a regular or revised settlement heretofore sanctioned by the Local Government, as having a right of occupancy in land which he or the person from whom he has immediately inherited has continuously occupied from the entry of his name or the name of such person (as the case may be) in such settlement, shall be presumed to have a right of occupancy in the land so occupied,

Rebuttal of presumption.

unless the landlord shall in a regular suit prove—

(1) that within the thirty years immediately before the institution of such suit other tenants of the same class in the same or in adjacent villages have ordinarily been ejected from their holdings at the will of the landlord; or

(2) that the tenant has voluntarily admitted before any officer employed in making or revising a regular settlement of land revenue or before any officer authorized to attest the entries in the record of such settlement, that he is a tenant not having a right of occupancy, and that such admission has been recorded at the time by the officer so employed or authorized.

Right of occupancy in land taken in exchange.

7. If the tenant has voluntarily exchanged the land, or any portion of the land, formerly occupied by him for other land belonging to the same landlord, the land taken in exchange shall, for the purposes of this Act, be held to be subject to the same right of occupancy as the land given in exchange would have been subject to if the exchange had not taken place.

Suits to establish rights of occupancy on other grounds.

8. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to preclude any person claiming a right of occupancy on any ground other than the grounds hereinbefore specified from suing to establish such right.

Non-acquisition of right of occupancy by lapse of time.

9. No tenant shall be deemed to acquire a right of occupancy by mere lapse of time.

And no right of occupancy in the common lands belonging to a pattídárí village-community shall be acquired under this Chapter.

CHAPTER III.—Of Rent.

1.—Enhancement.

Decree for enhancement of rent.

10. No tenant shall, in the absence of an agreement or decree of Court to the contrary effect, be held liable, in a suit for arrears of rent in respect of any land, to pay rent exceeding in amount the rent payable by him in respect of such land for the last preceding agricultural year, unless a decree for the enhancement of the rent has been made as hereinafter provided.

The said Lieutenant Governor shall have power, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, to declare for all or any of the Districts under his government the day on which the agricultural year shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to commence.

Grounds of enhancement.

11. The Court may decree that the rent previously payable by any tenant having a right of occupancy may be enhanced on any of the following grounds:—

1st Ground.—That the quantity of land held by him as tenant exceeds the quantity for which he has previously been liable to pay rent.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall decree rent for the land in excess at the same rate as that payable in respect of the land of a similar description and with similar advantages held by him of the same landlord.

2nd Ground.—That the rate of rent paid by him is below the rate of rent usually paid in the same or adjoining villages by the same class of tenants having a right of occupancy for land of a similar description and with similar advantages.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall enhance his rent to the amount claimed by the plaintiff not exceeding such rate.

3rd Ground.—That the rate of rent paid by him is,

if he belong to the class described in clause 1 of section five, more than fifty per centum, if he belong to any of the classes specified in clauses 2, 3 or 4 of section five, more than thirty per centum, and if he belong to the class specified in section six, more than fifteen per centum, below the rate of rent usually paid in the neighbourhood by tenants of the same class not having a right of occupancy for land of a similar description and with similar advantages.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall enhance his rent to the amount claimed by the plaintiff not exceeding such rate, less fifty per centum, thirty per centum or fifteen per centum, as the case may be.

Enhancement when tenant pays revenue or cesses.

12. If the revenue or any of the village-cesses is payable by the defendant, the rate to which his rent may be enhanced shall be reduced by the amount so payable.

Suit for re-enhancement.

13. After a decree has been passed under section ten, no suit shall lie against the defendant for re-enhancement of his rent until the expiration of five years from the date of such decree, unless in the mean time there has taken place a general revision of regular settlement, under which the revenue payable for the land comprised in the decree has been increased.

2.—Abatement.

Grounds of right to abatement.

14. Every tenant having a right of occupancy shall be entitled to claim abatement of the rent previously paid by him on either of the following grounds, and on no others:—

(1) that the area of the land in his occupation has been diminished by diluvion or otherwise, or proved to be less than the quantity for which rent has been previously paid by him; or

(2) that the productive powers of such land have been decreased by any cause beyond his control.

3.—Remission.

When Court may allow remission from rent.

15. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, it shall be lawful for the Court, in making a decree for an arrear of rent, if the area of the land in the tenant's occupation has been diminished by diluvion or otherwise, or if the produce of such land has been diminished by drought or hail, or other calamity beyond his control, to such an extent that the full amount of rent payable by him cannot, in the opinion of the Court, be equitably decreed,

to allow such remission from the rent payable by him as may appear equitable:

Provided that if the tenant hold a lease for an unexpired term of not less than five years, or have a right of occupancy, in a revenue-paying estate, no such remission shall be allowed to him, unless a remission of revenue has been allowed on the same ground and by competent authority in respect of the same estate.

4.—Rent in Kind.

Commutation of rent in kind.

16. No commutation of rent in kind into rent in money, and no commutation of rent in money into rent in kind, shall take place without the consent of both the landlord and the tenant.

Division and appraisement of produce taken for rent.

17. Whenever rent is taken by division of the produce in kind, or by estimate or appraisement of the standing crop, or other procedure of a similar nature, requiring the presence of the person entitled to the rent and of the cultivator, either personally or by their recognized agents, if either party neglects to be present at the proper period, or if a dispute arises between the parties regarding such division, estimate or appraisement, either party may present an application to the Court, on a paper bearing a stamp of eight annas, requesting that a proper person be deputed to make the division, estimate or appraisement.

Procedure in case of dispute.

18. On receiving such application and such sum, to be paid in the first instance by the applicant, as the Court thinks sufficient to defray the costs of serving the notice and making the award next hereinafter mentioned, the Court shall issue a written notice to the other party requiring him to attend on the date and at the place specified in the notice, and shall depute a proper person to make the division, estimate or appraisement and to direct by whom the costs of each party are to be paid.

The award of such person in respect of the said division, estimate or appraisement and costs shall be final, unless within three months from the date thereof either party institutes a suit to set it aside.

CHAPTER IV.—OF EJECTMENT.

Ejectment of tenant with right of occupancy

19. No tenant having a right of occupancy in any land shall be ejected therefrom otherwise than in execution of a decree.

Such decree shall not be made, unless

(1) at the date of the decree, a decree against such tenant for an arrear of rent in respect of such land has remained unsatisfied for fifteen days or upwards; or

(2) the landlord tenders to the tenant, in addition to any compensation to which he may be entitled under sections twenty-seven and thirty-seven (but subject to deduction in respect of the arrears of rent, if any, payable by him), such compensation as the Court thinks fit, not less than fifteen, and not more than thirty, times the amount of the net annual profits receivable by the tenant in respect of such land on an average of the three years next before the date of the tender.

Nothing in the last preceding clause shall be deemed to apply to a tenant belonging to any of the classes specified in section five, or to a tenant when he, or the person from whom he has inherited, has continuously occupied such land for thirty years or upwards.

Ejectment of tenant without right of occupancy.

20. A tenant not having a right of occupancy may be ejected—

first, if a decree has been obtained against him for arrears of rent or for ejectment; or second, when he is not holding under an unexpired lease, or an agreement, or a decree of Court, by notice given by the landlord in manner hereinafter mentioned.

Time of ejectment.

21. Notwithstanding anything herein contained, no tenant shall be ejected from the land in his occupation, except between the fifteenth day of April and the fifteenth day of June, unless while the rent in respect of such land is in arrear, he has failed to cultivate the land in accordance with the terms on which he holds it.

Notice of Ejectment.

Notice of ejectment.

22. The notice of ejectment shall be written in the vernacular language of the district: it shall specify the lands from which the tenant is to be ejected; and it shall inform him that, if he means to dispute the ejectment, he must institute a suit for that purpose on or before the fifteenth day of May next after the service of the notice, or quit the land on or before that date.

The said Lieutenant Governor shall determine what, for the purposes of this section, shall be deemed to be the vernacular language of each District in the territories under his government.

Service of notice.

23. On the landlord's application to the Tahsildár or other officer authorized to serve such notices, the notice shall be served by him on or before the fifteenth day of April, and the landlord shall pay the costs of service.

The notice shall, if practicable, be served personally on the tenant.

But if he cannot be found, service may be made by affixing the notice at his usual place of residence, or, if he does not reside in the district wherein the land is situate, at some conspicuous place in the village wherein the land is situate.

Power to alter dates for suing to dispute, and for serving notice of, ejectment.

24. The said Lieutenant Governor shall have power, from time to time, by notification published in the official Gazette not less than six months before such notification is to come into force, to fix, for the purposes of sections twenty-two and twenty-three, in all or any of the Districts under his government, any two days other than the days fixed in the same sections:

Provided that between the days so fixed by notification, there shall be an interval of at least one month.

Cessation of tenancy on failure to contest notice.

25. If the tenant on whom such notice of ejectment has been served fails to institute, on or before the fifteenth day of May next after the service, or, in case the said Lieutenant Governor fixes for the purpose of section twenty-two any day other than the said fifteenth day of May, then on or before the day so fixed, a suit to contest his liability to be ejected, his tenancy of the land in respect of which the notice has been served shall be held to cease on that day.

Assistance to eject.

When assistance to eject may be given by Court.

26. If no such suit be brought, or if such suit be brought and dismissed, and the landlord require the assistance of the Court to eject any person whose tenancy is alleged to have ceased under the provisions of section twenty-two, he may apply for such assistance; and if the Court be satisfied that notice of ejectment was duly served on such person, it shall, subject to the provisions of section nineteen, give such assistance accordingly.

Nothing done by the Court under this section shall affect the right of any tenant to institute a suit against his landlord on account of illegal ejectment, and to recover compensation for the same.

Growing Crops.

Compensation to ejected tenant for growing crops.

27. Any tenant ejected in accordance with the provisions of this Act, shall be entitled to receive from the landlord the [illegible] of any growing crops [illegible] value [illegible] ingathered products of the earth [illegible] or other [illegible] tenant and being on the land [illegible] belonging to such [illegible] at the time of the ejectment:

Provided that if the [illegible] land has been sown or planted by the tenant [illegible] after the service on him of the notice mentioned [illegible] in section twenty, he shall not be so entitled [illegible] unless, after such service, the landlord has expressly authorized him to continue to occupy the [illegible] land.

CHAPTER V.—OF RELINQUISHMENT, LEASES AND UNDER-LEASES, ALIENATION AND SUCCESSION.

1.—Relinquishment.

Relinquishment of land by tenant.

28. Every tenant shall be liable to pay the rent payable in respect of the land in his occupation for the ensuing agricultural year, unless, on or before the first day of January next before the commencement of that year, he gives notice to the landlord of his intention to relinquish such land before the commencement of such year, and relinquishes it accordingly, or unless the land has been let to any other person by the landlord.

Power to fix commencement of agricultural year for purposes of section 28.

29. The said Lieutenant Governor shall have power, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, to declare, for all or any of the Districts under his government, the day on which the agricultural year shall, for the purposes of section twenty-eight be deemed to commence, and, in lieu of the said first day of January, to substitute, for the purposes of section twenty-eight, in all or any of the same Districts, such day as he thinks fit.

Discharge of tenant.

30. If the tenant relinquishes the land according to his said notice, he shall be discharged from all liability to pay the rent which would otherwise have accrued due in respect of such land after the date of the relinquishment.

Refusal to receive notice.

31. If the landlord or his recognized agent refuse to receive such notice, he tenant may apply to the tahsíldár or proper officer, and written notice shall thereupon be served by him on such landlord or agent, and the tenant shall pay the costs of service.

The notice shall, if practicable, be served personally on the landlord or agent.

But if he cannot be found, service may be made by affixing the notice at his usual place of residence, or, if he does not reside in the district wherein the land is situate, at some conspicuous place in the village wherein the land is situate.

2.—Leases and Under-leases.

Right to let or under-let.

32. Every tenant having a right of occupancy may let or under-let the land in his occupation or any part thereof:

Saving of agreements not to let or sub-let.

Provided that nothing in the former part of this section shall be deemed to affect any agreement on the part of a lessee that he will not, or will not without the previous consent of the lessor or his representative, under-let or part with the possession of the said land or any portion thereof.

Liability of lessee and under-lessee.

33. Every person to whom land is let or under-let under section thirty-two shall in respect of such land, and so far as regards the landlord and his representative, be subject to all the liabilities under this Act to which the lessor or under-lessor would have been subject in respect of such land, and so far as regards such landlord and his representative, in case the lease or under-lease had not been made.

3.—Alienation.

Right of tenant to alienate.

34. Any tenant having a right of occupancy claimable in accordance [illegible] occupation the terms of any of the [illegible] otherwise [illegible] of section five, may [illegible] ty for which the land in his occupation, or any part the[illegible]; or

Landlord's right of pre-emption.

Provided that in every such case the land of such land aforesaid shall be offered [illegible] and his con- in the first instance to t[illegible] lord at the market-valu[illegible] shall not be alienated to any other person unle[illegible] landlord shall, for the space of one month, re[illegible] or neglect to complete the purchase.

Every other tenant may alienate the land in his occupation, or any part thereof, with his landlord's previous consent, but not otherwise.

Rights and liabilities of tenant's alienee.

35. Every person other than the landlord, to whom land is alienated under section thirty-four, shall, in respect of such land, have the same rights and be subject to the same liabilities as the tenant making the alienation.

Succession to right of occupancy.

36. When a tenant having a right of occupancy in any land dies his right shall devolve on his male lineal descendants (if any), and, failing such descendants, the right shall go to his male collateral relatives: provided that the common ancestor of [illegible] deceased and his said relatives shall have occupied such land.

As among descendants and collateral relatives claiming under this section, such right shall devolve and go as if it were land left by the deceased in the village in which such land is situate.

CHAPTER VI.—Of Compensation for Tenants' Improvements.

Tenant's right to compensation for improvements.

37. If any tenant, or, in the case of a tenant with a right of occupancy, the person from whom he has inherited, makes any such improvements on the land in his occupation as are hereinafter mentioned, the rent payable by him or his representative in respect of such land shall not be enhanced, nor shall he or his representative be ejected from the same land, unless and until he or his representative, as the case may be, has received compensation for the money or labour, or both, expended in making such improvements by him, or the person from whom he has inherited, or whom he represents, within thirty years next before the date of such enhancement or ejectment.

"Improvements" defined.

38. The word "improvements," as used in section thirty-seven, means works by which the annual letting-value of the land has been, and at the time of demanding compensation, continues to be, increased, and shall comprise—

1st, the construction of works for the storage of water, for the supply of water for agricultural purposes, for drainage, and for protection against floods; the construction of wells, the reclaiming and clearing of waste lands and other works of a like nature;

2nd, the renewal or reconstruction of any of the foregoing works, or such alterations therein, or additions thereto, as are not required for maintaining the same, and which increase durably their value.

Compensation how made.

39. Such compensation may, at the option of the landlord or his representative, be made—

(1) by payment in money;

(2) by the grant of a beneficial lease of the land by the landlord or his representative to the tenant or his representative; or

(3) partly by payment in money, and partly by the grant of such lease as aforesaid.

Provision for difference as to amount or value of compensation.

40. In case of difference as to the amount or value of the compensation tendered, either party may present an application to the Court on a paper bearing a stamp of eight annas, stating the matter in dispute, and requesting a determination thereof.

Notice of such application shall be served on the other party by the proper officer, and the applicant shall pay the costs of service.

On receiving such application, the Court shall, after taking such evidence as the parties or either of them may adduce, and after making such further enquiry (if any) as it may deem necessary, shall determine (as the case may be) the amount of the payment, or the terms of the lease, or both:

Provided that, in determining such amount or value, the Court shall take into account any assistance given by the landlord, either directly by money, material or labour at the time of making such improvements, or indirectly by subsequently allowing the tenant to hold at a rate of rent more favourable than the rate at which he otherwise would have held.

Tender of lease for twenty years to bar right to claim compensation.

41. If in any case a landlord tenders to a tenant a lease of the land in his occupation, for a term of not less than twenty years from the date of the tender, at the annual rent then paid by the tenant, or at such other annual rent as may be agreed upon, such tender, if accepted by the tenant, shall bar any claim by him or his representative in respect of improvements previously made on such land by the tenant or the person from whom he has inherited.

CHAPTER VII.—Of Procedure.

Civil Courts to hear cases under certain sections.

42. Cases cognizable under sections five, six, eleven, fourteen, nineteen, twenty and twenty-five, shall, unless otherwise provided for by any law for the time being in force, and subject to the provisions of section twenty-one of Act No. XIX of 1865 (to define the jurisdiction of the Courts of judicature of the Panjáb and its dependencies), be heard in the Civil Courts other than the Courts of Small Causes, unless when such Courts of Small Causes shall have been specially empowered by the Local Government, under Act No. XI of 1865, section six, to hear such cases.

Applications under certain sections to be proceedings on Revenue side.

Applications under sections seventeen, twenty-three, twenty-six, and thirty-one shall be deemed to be proceedings on the Revenue side: they shall be subject to the rules of procedure for the time being in force in such cases; and all orders on such applications shall be appealable to the Financial Commissioner of the Panjáb.

Stamp on certain plaints.

43. The plaint in every suit under sections five, six, eleven, fourteen and twenty-five, shall bear a stamp of eight annas.

Saving of procedure for recovery of rent.

44. The procedure now in force in the Panjáb for the recovery of rent shall, except in so far as it is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, continue to be in force.

Confirmation of proceedings of settlement officers.

45. All proceedings of officers of Government in making or revising, prior to the passing of this Act, settlements of land-revenue shall, so far as such proceedings are consistent with the provisions of this Act, and subject to appeal and revision when an appeal or a revision is provided, be deemed to have been taken in accordance with law.

WHITLEY STOKES,

Asst. Secy. to the Govt. of India,
Home Dept. (Legislative).

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 28th October 1868:—

No. 26 OF 1868.

A Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence.

PREAMBLE.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend the Law of Evidence; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

MEANING OF WORDS.

1. In the following rules, the word Court shall be taken to comprise all Courts of Justice, civil or criminal, and all persons having by law or consent of parties authority to take evidence; and the word Cause shall be taken to comprise all judicial proceedings, civil or criminal.

ADMISSIBILITY.

2. Whenever any evidence is said to be admissible, it is not meant that it is to be regarded as conclusive, but only that the weight, if any, which the deciding authority may consider due, shall be allowed to it.

Anything which has a bearing upon any question in issue in a cause, the determination of which question is material to the decision of the cause, is admissible, unless it is excluded by the rules contained in this Act.

3. No statement by a witness of anything, founded upon anything spoken, written, or otherwise intimated by another person, and no statement contained in any document is admissible in evidence, except in the cases specified in the rules hereinafter contained.

Illustrations.

(a.)—B is tried for robbing C. A gives evidence that D told him that he saw B rob C. The evidence is inadmissible.

(b.)—B is tried for robbing C. A gives evidence that D, a deaf and dumb person, intimated to him by signs that he saw B rob C. The evidence is inadmissible.

(c.)—A gives evidence that B robbed C. Being asked how he knows it, he says that he knows it only because E told him so. The evidence which has been admitted must be struck out.

(d.)—A says that B was alive on the 1st January 1860. It appears that A does not speak to this fact of his own knowledge, but that he learnt it from a letter written to him by C, or from a newspaper, or from a printed book, or a picture. In each of these cases, A's statement is not admissible as evidence that B was alive on that day.

(e.)—A says that B was alive on the 1st January 1860. Being asked how he knows this, he produces a letter dated that day from B, whose hand-writing he verifies. The letter is admissible as evidence that B was alive on that day.

4. Such evidence is admissible,—

(1.)—Where the fact that a thing was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated is a question in issue.

Illustration.

A says that he has been told by B that he saw C pick D's pocket. This is admissible in an action against B for slandering C.

(2.)—Where the fact that a person by or to whom the thing was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated, was acquainted with such thing is a question in issue.

Illustration.

A writes to B "I have just heard that C has failed." The letter is received by B. The letter is not admissible as evidence that C had failed; but when it is proved that C had then failed, the letter is admissible as evidence that the failure was known to A at the place and time at which the letter was written, and also that B was apprised of it.

(3.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated tends to explain any act or conduct which is a question in issue.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A says on a trial of C for robbing D's house, that he heard B say to C "D's house has been robbed," and that thereupon C fled. This evidence is admissible.

(b.)—On a trial of B for robbing C's house, it is proved that B fled immediately after the robbery. A witness is produced who says that he heard A tell B before B fled, that a warrant had been issued for his arrest under a decree of court. This evidence is admissible.

(c.)—A is on his trial for shooting at B with intent to kill him. It is alleged on A's behalf that the shooting was accidental. Evidence of what A said at the time is admissible as evidence, either for A or against him.

(d.)—A sues B for compensation for maliciously causing him to be apprehended on a charge of theft. Evidence that a theft had been committed in B's house, and that C told B that he saw A running away immediately after, is admissible.

(e.)—A says that he has heard B say to C "Pay me the 1,000 rupees which you owe me." This is no evidence that C owed B 1,000 rupees, but it is evidence that B claimed 1,000 rupees, and it is admissible in order to introduce evidence of what C said or did with respect to the claim.

(f.)—A is charged with sedition, and is proved to have combined with B for seditious purposes. Evidence of words spoken by B, while taking part in a riot in furtherance of those purposes, is admissible against A.

(4.)—Where the thing was spoken, written, stated or otherwise intimated by a party to the suit, or some one whom he represents in interest, and it is sought to be used against him.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A brings a suit against B to establish a right of way across B's field. Evidence that C, from whom B derives his title to the land, had, while owner, admitted A's right of way, is admissible.

(b.)—A writes to B "By the direction of C, I request you will ship for him 100 bales of cotton." The letter is evidence against A that he had received such direction from C but is not evidence against C that he had given the direction.

(c.)—In a deed to which A was not a party, but which was made between B and C, strangers to A, it is stated that A had become insolvent. This deed is as against B or C admissible in evidence to show that A had become insolvent, but it is not admissible against A for that purpose.

(5.)—In the cases provided for by sections 368, 369, 370 and 371 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(6.)—Where the evidence tendered consists in a statement which was received in evidence in a former judicial proceeding relating to the same subject and between the same parties, or those whom they represent in interest, and where the person who made such statement has since died, or become incapable of giving evidence, or where his presence cannot be procured: provided that if such person were present, his evidence would be admissible.

(7.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated in the ordinary course of business by a person who has died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A, the shipping agent of the firm of B and Co., states in a letter to B and Co. that he has just seen a certain ship of theirs sail from the port of Calcutta. The letter is admissible as evidence of the sailing of the ship.

(b.)—A, an attorney, prepares the draft of an intended deed to which B was to be a party, and indorses upon it a memorandum that a copy had been sent to another attorney on a certain day. The draft contains a statement that B was in insolvent circumstances. The draft and indorsement are admissible as evidence to show that such a copy was sent to the other attorney, but are not admissible as evidence to show that B had become insolvent.

(c.)—A, a commercial traveller employed by the firm of B and Co. to obtain orders and information in the cotton trade only, writes to B and Co. that the firm of C and Co. have ordered of him as such traveller a certain quantity of cotton, and in the same letter he mentions the state of the silk market. A's letter is admissible as evidence of the order given to him, but not of the state of the silk market.

(8.)—Where the thing intimated consists in entries in books kept in the ordinary course of business, or consists in written acknowledgments of the receipt of money, goods, securities, or property of any kind, or in any document used in commerce.

Illustrations.

(a.)—Entries are made by a clerk of a firm in the books of the firm to the effect that the firm has received a consignment of cotton from A, and has purchased 50 chests of indigo from B. These are admissible in evidence against all the partners in the firm.

(b.)—A, one of two partners, makes an entry in the partnership books that he had lent his partner B Rupees 1,000. The entry is not admissible in evidence against B that A had lent him the Rupees 1,000.

(c.)—A clerk whose business it is to make entries in the books of a firm of all monies paid by him, makes an entry in the books that he had paid away Rupees 1,000 for the firm. This entry is admissible in evidence that he had so paid away the money.

(d)—The firm of A and Co. keep a book in which the despatch and receipt of letters by the firm is regularly noted. An entry in this book of the despatch of a letter on the 1st January 1860 to the firm of B and Co. is admissible in evidence that a letter was despatched on that day by A and Co. to B and Co.

(e.)—The letters written by the firm of A and Co. are, according to the ordinary course of business, copied into a book, and afterwards despatched. A and Co. in order to show that a letter in stated terms was despatched by them on a certain day to B and Co., tender in evidence an entry in their letter-book purporting to be a copy of a letter addressed by them on that day to B and Co., and an entry of the fact that such letter was despatched. The entries are admissible.

(f.)—A guarantees the payment by C of a sum of money due from him to B. A pays the amount to B, and sues C for re-payment. A tenders in evidence a receipt given to himself by B for the amount due. The receipt is admissible in evidence.

(g.)—A sues B for the proceeds of a cargo of cotton consigned by A to B, and sold through a broker. The account sales rendered by the broker are admissible in evidence.

(h.)—A, a wharfinger, gives to B an acknowledgment that 100 tons of copper have been deposited at A's wharf. This acknowledgment is admissible in evidence of the fact that the deposit has been made.

(i.)—A effects a policy on his ship against sea-risks. The ship goes to sea and sustains injury. A institutes a suit to recover damages from the underwriters. The log-book of the ship is admissible in evidence.

(9)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated relates to the usages or tenets of any body of men, the constitution or government of any religious or charitable foundation, or the meaning of any technical or conventional words or terms, or of any words or terms used in particular districts, or to any matter of public or general interest, and was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A, in order to show the religious tenets of a certain sect, tenders in evidence a manuscript treatise, proved to have been written by a deceased member of the sect. The treatise is admissible.

(b.)—It is a disputed fact in a suit whether a certain spot is or is not a public landing-place. Statements made on the subject by A and B, now deceased, who resided in the neighbourhood, are admissible in evidence.

(10.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated has reference to the relationship of one person to another, and was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured: provided that such person was a member of the family, or had otherwise special means of knowledge.

Illustrations.

(a.)—It is a disputed fact in the suit whether A is the son of B. A statement made on the subject by C, who was a nurse in B's family about the time of A's birth, is admissible in evidence.

(b.)—A alleging that he is the son of B, deceased, produces the following documents in which he is mentioned as the son of B:—

1. An entry made by B in a memorandum book stating A's birth;
2. Letters which passed between two of B's brothers, since deceased;
3. A deed executed by B.

A also produces witnesses who state that B told them that A was his son.

The contents of the documents and the testimony of the witnesses are admissible in evidence.

(11.)—Where the thing intimated is a fact of a public nature and appears by a recital contained in any Act of the Governor General of India made before or after the passing of this Act, or is notified by any official communication of the Government appearing in the Gazette of India, or in any paper purporting to be the Government Gazette of any Presidency or Lieutenant Governorship of British India, or of any colony or possession of the British Crown.

(12.)—Where the thing intimated is that there has been a public meeting or public proceeding, and such intimation is contained in a report thereof published in any newspaper or journal.

Explanation.—Such report is not admissible in evidence of any fact reported to have occurred, or of any statement reported to have been made at the meeting or proceeding.

Evidence of Law of Foreign Country.

(13.)—Where the thing intimated purports to be the law of a foreign country, and appears to be contained in books or documents purporting to be printed or published under the authority of the Government of that country, or in reports of decisions of the Courts of such country.

Maps.

5. Maps made under the authority of Government shall be admissible as evidence.

"Res Judicata."

6. A grant of probate or of administration unrevoked shall have effect as provided by the Indian Succession Act, section 242.

7. A decree declaring a marriage void is proof that the parties never were husband and wife. A decree declaring a marriage dissolved is proof that the parties have ceased to be husband and wife, if they ever were such.

8. A decree adjudging a ship to the captors as a prize of war is proof that the ship has become the property of the captors.

9. The judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction upon a matter directly in issue is admissible as evidence between the same parties, and those who represent them in interest upon the same matter directly in issue in another cause; but not between any other parties, except as provided for in the next following section of this Act.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A sues B for a horse, alleging that it was stolen from himself, and that B bought it, knowing it to be stolen. Judgment is given in B's favor. B afterwards loses the horse. A finds it, and B sues A for it. A in defence makes the same allegations as in the former suit. The judgment pronounced in the former suit is admissible as evidence in B's favor.

(b.)—A sues B for rent in the Court of the Collector, which has cognizance of such suits. B sets up in defence a mortgage under which he is entitled to retain the rent in satisfaction of the interest of his mortgage. A disputes the genuineness of the mortgage, but the Court pronounces it genuine, and dismisses A's suit. Afterwards B sues A in the District Court to recover the amount due to him upon the mortgage. A disputes genuineness of the mortgage. The judgment of the Collector is admissible in evidence.

10. A decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction is admissible as evidence that such a judgment pronounced between the parties, but is not as against any person other than the parties thereto and those who represent them in interest evidence of any other fact thereby appearing.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A sues B for compensation for injury sustained through the negligence of C, who is B's agent. A obtains judgment. In a suit brought by B against C for compensation for loss sustained by B through C's negligence, the judgment is admissible as evidence of the amount which A has been adjudged to pay, but not as evidence of B's negligence.

(b.)—A sues B for compensation, because B yielded up to C certain lands which B held as guardian of A, who was then a minor. A decree passed in a prior suit, whereby B was directed to yield up possession to C as owner, is admissible in evidence.

(c.)—A is tried on the charge of having forged a deed of gift from B. He is acquitted. Afterwards C, alleging the deed of gift to be a forgery, institutes a suit against A for certain lands, of which A has obtained possession under it. The record of A's acquittal is not admissible in evidence.

(d.)—A, one of three Hindú brothers, undivided in estate, dies, and his brothers B and C alleging that they are his heirs, sell to D a portion of the land which they possessed jointly with A.

E, claiming as the adopted son and heir of A, sues D for A's share of the land sold to D, and obtains a decree in his favor. He afterwards claiming as such adopted son of A, sues B and C for A's share of the land which remains in their possession. The decree in the former suit is not admissible in evidence.

(e.)—A, alleging that he is the only brother and the heir of B, deceased, sues C for possession of B's land. The Court declares A's title established, and decrees that C shall yield up the land to him.

Afterwards D claims to be the son and heir of B, and sues A for possession of the lands. The decree in the former suit is admissible in evidence that A had obtained such a decree, but is not admissible as evidence that he was entitled to the land as the only brother and heir of B.

(f.)—Two ships come into collision, whereby A, a passenger in one of them, is maimed, and B's goods are destroyed. A obtains a decree for compensation from the owners of the other ship on the ground that the injuries were sustained by him through the negligence of their captain. B sues the owners of the same ship for compensation for the loss of his goods. The judgment is not admissible in B's suit as evidence of the captain's negligence.

(g.)—A sues B for maintenance of C, a minor, whom A alleges to be B's son. B denies that C is his son. The Court decides that C is B's son, and decrees payment by B of A's claims.

B dies. C, alleging that he is B's son, sues the executor of D for a legacy of 10,000 rupees; D having by his will bequeathed that sum to every child of B. The judgment is not admissible in evidence that C is not a son of B.

Proof of Writings which constitute primary evidence.

11. A writing which is not required by law to be attested, but which is alleged to have been signed by a specified person, or to have been written wholly or in part by a specified person, shall not, except in the cases provided for by sections 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21 of this Act, be received as evidence, unless the signature attached thereto or so much of the same writing as it is sought to verify, be proved to be in the hand-writing of the person by whom it is alleged to have been written or signed.

12. A written instrument which is required by law to be attested, shall not (except in the cases provided for by s. 20 of this Act) be received as evidence, unless the following rules are complied with :—

(1.)—The execution of such instrument shall be proved by one attesting witness at the least if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the Court by which the cause is tried, and capable of bearing testimony.

(2.)—If no attesting witness is alive and subject to such process as aforesaid, and capable of bearing testimony, it shall be proved that the attestation of one attesting witness at the least is in his hand-writing, and evidence must be adduced to show that the person who executed the instrument was the same person who is alleged to have done so.

13. In order to ascertain whether a signature, writing, or seal is genuine, any signature, writing, or seal, which has been admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, may be compared with the disputed one.

14. Where a written instrument purports or is proved to be thirty years old, and is produced from the proper custody, it shall be admissible in evidence without proof of its execution or attestation.

Proof of the Contents of Documents by Secondary Evidence.

15. Evidence of the contents or purport of any written or printed document, or of letters, figures, or other marks not produced to the Court, shall not be admissible, except as provided by the rules next following :—

(1.)—A copy of or extract from any proclamation, order, or regulation, issued by Her Majesty or by the Privy Council or any department of Her Majesty's Government shall be admissible in evidence: Provided that such copy or extract is contained in the London Gazette or in such other Gazette or paper as mentioned in section four, clause (11) of this Act: Or provided it purports to be printed by the Government printer, or to be printed under the authority of the Legislature of any British colony or possession, or to be certified to be true by the proper officer.

(2.)—A copy of a record of any court, or of an entry in any public book or register, which is proved to be a correct copy, or which purports to be under the seal of such Court, or to be certified by the proper officer, shall be admissible as evidence of the existence and the contents of any such record or entry.

(3.)—Evidence shall be admissible of inscriptions or marks which are proved to have been destroyed or lost, or which cannot be produced by reason of their being engraved on or affixed to trees, buildings, or other things of an immoveable character.

(4.)—Evidence of the contents of a written or printed document shall be admissible when it has been proved that the document has been destroyed or lost, or when the person in whose custody it is, is not subject to the process of the Court by which the cause is tried, or is not legally bound to produce the document, or refuses, after due notice, to produce it, or when its absence is otherwise satisfactorily accounted for.

Evidence of Terms of Contract.

16. Where a contract or a grant or other disposition of property is in writing, no evidence of the terms of such contract, grant, or disposition shall be received, except the writing itself, or such evidence of its contents as may be admissible under the provisions of the last preceding section.

Explanation.—The statement of a fact in any such document does not preclude the admission of oral evidence relating to the same fact; and where a suit is instituted for the purpose of setting aside or varying a document on the ground of a mistake in the writing thereof, evidence may be received for the purpose of proving such mistake.

Papers of which proof is not required.

17. No proof shall be required of the genuineness of any paper purporting to be the London Gazette or the Gazette of India or the Government Gazette of any Presidency or Lieutenant Governorship of British India, or of any colony or possession of the British Crown, nor of any paper purporting to be a newspaper or journal, or a copy of a private Act of Parliament printed by the Queen's printer.

18. No proof shall be required of the genuineness of any paper purporting to be a certificate, certified copy or other document which is by law made evidence of any particular fact: Provided that such paper is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by the law in that behalf.

19. No proof shall be required of the official position of any person certifying to the truth of any such paper as is mentioned in the last preceding rule.

20. Any paper purporting to be a power of attorney, and to have been executed before and authenticated by a notary public or any Court, Judge, Magistrate, British Consul or Vice-Consul, or representative of Her Majesty, or of the Government of India, shall be admissible in evidence.

21. An impression of any document made by a copying machine, or a representation of any thing made by means of photography, or of any other process which affords a reasonable assurance of correctness, shall be admissible in evidence, wherever under these Rules the production of the original may be dispensed with.

Persons who may testify.

22. Those persons only shall be incompetent to testify who from tender years, or from unsoundness of mind, or from any other cause appear to the judge to be incapable of understanding the questions addressed to them.

Privilege.

23. A witness is not at liberty to disclose a communication,—

(1.)—When such communication relates to affairs of State, and its disclosure has not been sanctioned by the proper officer.

(2.)—Where the communication was made by one of a married couple to the other during their marriage, and did not relate to a matter then in dispute in a suit pending between them, and where the consent of the person who made it, or, if such person be dead, of his or her representative in interest, has not been obtained for such disclosure.

(3.)—Where the witness is a barrister, attorney, or vakeel, or an interpreter or intermediate agent between the client and his legal adviser, and the communication was made by the client or principal to the witness in the course of his professional employment, or consists of any advice given or conveyed by the witness professionally to his client or principal, or of the contents of any document of his client or principal, the knowledge of which the witness has acquired in the course of his professional employment, and where the client or principal or his representative in interest has not consented to the disclosure of such communication.

(4.) Where the disclosure demanded of the witness consists in the production of documents belonging to another person who would not be bound to produce them if in his possession, and who has not consented to their production.

24. A witness is not compellable to disclose to the Court any confidential communication which may have taken place between him and his legal professional adviser.

25. No communication made in furtherance of a criminal purpose is protected from disclosure.

26. A witness summoned to produce a document shall, if the same be in his custody, possession, or power, be bound to bring it into Court, notwithstanding any objection to the right of the party calling for it to compel its production or to its being read, or being put in as evidence, or to the disclosure of its contents.

The validity of any such objection made by the person bringing the document shall be determined by the Court; and for the better determination thereof, it shall be lawful for the Court to receive any admissible evidence which such person may give respecting it, and it shall also be lawful for the Court, unless the document relates to affairs of State, to inspect it, and, if necessary, to employ any person to interpret it under the obligation of an oath, and not to disclose its contents except to the Court, unless the Court shall decide that the document is to be given in evidence.

27. No question shall be put to a married person which substantially amounts to inquiring whether that person has had sexual intercourse forbidden to him or her by the law to which he or she is subject.

28. No question regarding the occurrence of sexual intercourse between a husband and wife shall be put to either of them, except in the case of Christians, where the suit is for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of bodily incapacity; and except in the case of persons who are not Christians, where the knowledge of the fact inquired after is necessary to the determination of some question between the husband and wife according to the law to which they are subject.

Examination of Witnesses.

29. The party at whose instance a witness is examined may, with the permission of the Court, cross-examine such witness, to test his veracity, in the same manner as if the witness had not been called at his instance, and may be allowed to show that the witness has varied from a previous statement made by him.

30. In order to repel an attack on the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness, relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, shall be admissible, and for that purpose a copy duly certified of any deposition or statement taken before such authority shall be admissible in evidence that such deposition or statement was made, and that it was made at the time and place, and under the circumstances, if any, which shall be stated in the certificate or on the face of the deposition or statement.

31. It shall not be lawful to ask a witness, in order to test his credit, any question the answer to which might criminate, or might tend, directly or indirectly, to criminate him, or might expose or tend, directly or indirectly, to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture of any kind. But a witness shall not be excused from answering any question relevant to the matter in issue in any cause upon the ground that the answer to such question would or might criminate, or tend to criminate him, or that it would or might expose, or tend to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture. Provided that no answer which a witness shall be compelled to give shall, except for the purpose of punishing him for wilfully giving false evidence in such cause, be used as evidence against him in any criminal proceeding.

32. No evidence is admissible to contradict the answers of a party or a witness as to matters affecting his character, but not otherwise bearing upon any question in issue in the cause.

Evidence of statements or conduct of a witness inconsistent with his evidence as to a question directly in issue in a cause is not excluded by this rule.

Illustrations.

(a.) A claim against an underwriter is resisted on the ground of fraud. The party claimant is asked whether in a former transanction he had not made a fraudulent claim He denies it. Evidence is not admissible to show that he had made such fraudulent claim.

(b.) In a suit by A against B a witness for A is asked whether he had not been dismissed from B's service for misconduct. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to contradict the witness's statement as to such dismissal. The evidence is not admissible.

(c.) In an action against A for goods sold to him by B, a witness for B deposes that he saw the goods sold and delivered. He is asked whether he had not given a different account of the transaction. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had given such different account. This evidence is admissible. He is asked whether he had not, after the date of the alleged sale, dealt with B as the owner of the goods. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had so dealt with B. This evidence is admissible. He is asked whether he had not given a false account of another transaction not in issue in the cause. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had given such false account. This evidence is not admissible.

(d.) The witness is asked whether he had not received money or a promise of some favour from B to induce him to give his evidence. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had received such money or promise. This evidence is admissible.

33. A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing, or reduced into writing, relative to the subject-matter of the cause, without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. The Court may, however, at any time during the trial, require the production of the writing for its inspection, and may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as may seem fit.

34. A witness may while under examination refer to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned, or so soon afterwards that it may be reasonably presumed that the transaction was fresh in his memory; and he may for the like purpose refer to a writing made by any other person, and read by the witness at the time of such transaction, or so soon afterwards that it may be reasonably presumed that the transaction was fresh in his memory. In such case the writing shall be produced and may be seen by the adverse party, who may, if he choose, cross-examine the witness upon it.

Number of Witnesses.

35. A Court, if satisfied by the evidence given, may in any case act on such evidence, although there may be only the testimony of one witness.

This rule is not rendered inapplicable by the circumstance that the testimony is given in a trial for giving false evidence, or for any offence against the State, or that it is the testimony of an accomplice.

Things of which Judicial Notice is to be taken.

36. The Courts shall take judicial notice of,—

(1).—All Acts, Regulations and Ordinances having the force of law in any part of British India;

(2).—All public Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and all local and personal Acts directed by Parliament to be judicially noticed;

(3.)—The names, titles and functions of the persons filling for the time being any public office any part of India;

(4.)—All divisions of time, the geographical divisions of the world, the territories under the dominion of the British Crown, the commencement, continuation and termination of hostilities between the British Crown and any other State, and the existence, title and national flag of every sovereign or State recognized by the British Crown.

37. Every Court shall take judicial notice of the names of its own Members and Officers and of their deputies and subordinate Officers or Assistants, and also of all Officers acting in execution of its process, and of all Advocates, Attorneys, Proctors, Vakeels, Pleaders, and other persons authorized by law to act before it.

Sources of Information to which Courts may refer.

38. A Court may, in order to inform itself in respect of any of the matters mentioned in sections 36 and 37 of this Act, and also on matters of public history, literature, science, or art, refer, for the purposes of evidence, to such books, maps, almanacks, or charts as the Court shall consider to be of authority on the subject to which they relate.

Saving of Registration law.

39. The foregoing Rules are to take effect subject to the provisions of the law for the time being in force regarding the registration of any document.

Repeal of Acts.

40. Act No. XIX of 1853 (to amend the Law of Evidence in the Civil Courts of the East India Company in the Bengal Presidency), section 19, and Act No. II of 1855 (for the further improvement of the Law of Evidence) are hereby repealed.

Short title.

41. This Act may be called "The Indian Evidence Act."

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

THE present Bill is comprised in the fifth report which the Commissioners appointed to prepare a body of substantive law for India have recently submitted to Her Majesty. The remarks which the Commissioners have prefixed to their draft follow this statement, and will be found to give full information as to the object of the Bill, and the reasons for the changes which it proposes to introduce.

H. S. MAINE.

SIMLA,
22nd October 1868.

REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

WE, Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to prepare a body of substantive law for India, now humbly submit to Your Majesty rules of law which we have prepared on the subject of evidence.

India does not at present possess an uniform law upon this subject. Within the Presidency towns the English law of evidence is in force, modified by certain Acts of the Indian Legislature, of which Act II of 1855 is the most important.

This Act contains many valuable provisions. It extends the range of judicial notice, and facilitates the proof of documents, of foreign systems of law, and of matters of public history. It removes incompetency to testify by reason of interest or relationship; renders parties to suits liable to be called as witnesses, and makes husband and wife competent witnesses for or against each other in civil proceedings; renders dying declarations admissible, though the declarant may have entertained hopes of recovery; provides that witnesses may be cross-examined by the party who called them, and that they shall not be excused from answering questions because they may thereby criminate themselves. Declarations which were against the pecuniary interest of the persons who made them, and entries according to the usual course of business, both of which kinds of evidence the English law admits only in case of death, are under this Act admissible if the person who made the declaration or the entry has become incapable of giving evidence or if his testimony cannot be procured. The Act also gives to books regularly kept, and to certain commercial documents, the character of corroborative though not of independent evidence, and makes entries in such books independent evidence of certain formal matters; it extends the class of persons whose declarations are admissible in case of pedigree, and provides in effect that mistakes committed in the rejection or reception of evidence shall not lead to a new trial or to the reversal of a decision unless a substantial failure of justice has been caused thereby. The Act, however, bears reference in many places to the existing law, and it appears to have been designed, not as a complete body of rules, but as supplementary to and corrective of the English law, and also of the customary law of evidence prevailing in those parts of British India where the English law is not administered.

This customary law has not assumed any definite form; the Mahommedan law, since the enactment of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, has ceased to have any validity in the country courts, even in criminal matters; and those courts have in fact no fixed rules of evidence except those contained in Act II of 1855. They are not required to follow the English law as such, although they are not debarred from following it where they regard it as the most equitable.

In laying down uniform rules for the guidance of the Indian judges in general, as well in the Courts just mentioned as in those in which the English law of evidence has hitherto prevailed, we do not think that it would be advisable to adopt a system so artificial as that which has grown up in this country.

The English practice has been moulded in a great degree by our social and legal institutions and our forms of procedure; and much of it is admitted to be unsuited to the various states of society and the different forms of property which are to be met with in India.

In England the aim has been to avoid presenting to the consideration of the jury whatever was thought could not safely be presented to this unprofessional tribunal. In order to obtain this end, various kinds of evidence, which were dismissible little worthy of credit, were pronounced inadmissible, and a great deal of evidence which, if duly weighed and dispassionately considered, would tend to the elucidation of truth, is absolutely excluded. On the other hand, evidence is admitted which is at least as dangerous as that which is shut out. Thus parent and child cannot refuse to bear testimony for or against each other in criminal cases, while a wife cannot be asked a question on the trial of her husband, unless the trial be for an offence committed against herself. In matrimonial cases the inconsistencies of the law as to the competency of the married persons to give evidence cause frequent embarrassment, and even occasional failure of justice.

In a country like India, where the task of judicial investigation is attended with peculiar difficulties, and where it is the duty of the judge in all civil and in some criminal cases, to decide without a jury, there is greater danger of miscarriage from the mind of the court being uninformed than from its being unduly influenced by the information laid before it. It seems, therefore, better to afford every facility for the admission of truth although with some risk that falsehood or error may be mixed with it, than to narrow, with a view to the exclusion of falsehood, the channels by which truth is admitted. It is of course impossible to admit all evidence that may be offered, for this would lead to excessive waste of time, but we have provided that all relevant evidence not expressly excluded by our rules shall be admissible, and that except in those few cases where the law itself attaches a special importance or effect to particular evidence, the court shall decide for itself whether any weight, and what weight, shall be assigned to each piece of evidence that is submitted to it. The judge must, of course, form his own opinion regarding the relevancy of any evidence which the parties may desire to submit to him, but it is often difficult, especially in the early stage of a trial, to show the exact bearing of each piece of evidence upon the issues. It is by no means our desire that our rules should be understood as imposing upon the judges the use of excessive strictness in excluding evidence of which the applicability cannot be fully shown at the moment when the evidence is tendered. We have, however, inserted provisions intended to a guard against the trial of collateral issues arising out of questions asked with a view to impugn the credit of witnesses.

It will be seen that we have discarded, for the most part, the rules which limit the discretion of the Court in drawing its conclusions from the whole of the evidence. While we do not interfere with those provisions of the Act for the registration of assurances or of the Code of Criminal Procedure which recognize certain things as primâ facie evidence, that is to say, as conclusive unless met by counter-evidence; yet we do not by our own rules attach this character to evidence of any class, nor,—except where the testimony of a witness has been attacked,—do we recognize anything as corroborativet hough not independent evidence. We have provided that a Court may act upon the testimony of a single witness, even in the case of the gravest offences against the State, or of perjury, or of criminal charges supported by the evidence of accomplices alone.

An attempt to define all the cases in which, and the purposes for which, particular evidence may be received, would in our opinion impede instead of aiding the investigation of truth. We hope that the course which we have adopted will render it easier for those who administer the law to avoid the error so often committed in practice where a strict standard of admissibility exists, that of supposing that whatever evidence is admissible comes in some degree accredited to the court.

The exclusion even of relevant evidence may be desirable, when the evidence is such that people are naturally inclined to attach undue importance to it; when it is such as cannot be admitted without the danger of encouraging forgery; or when it is such as cannot be received or at least cannot be extorted, without injury to interests which are even more important than the judicial investigation of truth.

Although we have laid it down generally that all relevant evidence shall be admissible, we have thought it necessary to make certain exceptions from this rule. These exceptions relate chiefly to that kind of evidence which is described in the English books under the title "hearsay." We have, however, abstained from making use of the word "hearsay" from the uncertainty and vagueness of the meaning usually attributed to that word. What a witness says as to what some other person has said or written may be called "hearsay" in one sense of that word, and that the widest or popular sense; but the statements by a witness of what he has heard another person say may be in fact (as in cases of slander) the very matter in issue; or in other cases may be part of the circumstances which it is essential to ascertain. On the other hand, "hearsay" may be defined to be that which a witness does not say as of his own knowledge, but says that another has said or signified to him. This is probably a more strict and accurate definition of the word "hearsay" as used in the English law; but it does not include all that is known in that law as hearsay.

After much considering this subject, we have thought that it would promote a more accurate apprehension of our meaning, and be of more practical utility in the Indian courts, if we were to exclude the word altogether. We have, therefore, without attempting any definition of the word "hearsay," endeavoured to lay down rules for the exclusion of that class of evidence in the cases in which we think it ought to be excluded, and for the admission of it in the cases in which we think it ought to be admitted. We have accordingly gone through the various classes of evidence, in which arises the question of admissibility or exclusion of what is called in the English law "hearsay," and have endeavoured to state the rule applicable to each class.

Most of the rules for the admissibility of this kind of evidence are recognized by the English law, others are in accordance with the Indian Act II. of 1855, above referred to, or are intended to relax the English rules still further than was done by that enactment.

We have, for instance, made admissible in evidence that which has been spoken, written, or otherwise intimated in the ordinary course of business by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured; and we have admitted entries in books kept in the ordinary course of business. We have also made admissible written acknowledgments of the receipt of money, goods, securities, or property of any kind, and documents used in commerce. Declarations which under the English law are only admitted because they have been made against interest will, by the effect of our rules, be excluded, unless they have been made in the ordinary course of business. The test of pecuniary interest is exceedingly difficult of application, and appears to us to be of little value as a test of truth.

We have admitted statements as to matters of reputation and of pedigree made by persons since dead or incapacitated, or whose presence cannot be procured; adding in the case of pedigree a proviso that the person who made the statement shall have had special means of knowledge. We have discarded the condition of the English law which requires that the statement shall have been made before the controversy had arisen, as we think that this circumstance affects rather the weight than the admissibility of the statement.

We have allowed a limited effect, as evidence, to newspaper reports of public meetings.

The indulgence afforded to witnesses by the existing law in permitting them to refer to contemporaneous memoranda appears to us to be carried too far when copies of such memoranda are allowed to be used for the purpose; and our rules do not permit the use of copies.

Another cause of exclusion applies to documentary evidence. If some degree of caution were observed with regard to the authentication of writings, great facilities would be afforded for the fabrication of documents. We have, therefore, laid down rules for the evidence to be required of the proper execution of documents, and retaining the distinction between primary and secondary evidence, have provided against the admission of the latter where the former is procurable. We hope that these rules will, in combination with the laws lately passed by the Indian Legislature for the registration of assurances, tend to the improvement of Indian documentary evidence.*

The third case in which we have excluded testimony is, where its admission would be dangerous to the public service, or inconsistent with decency or morality, with the confidence of married life, or with the freedom of intercourse between a client and his legal adviser.

We have provided that questions of a criminal tendency shall not be asked merely in order to test the credit of a witness.

We have not adopted s. 19 of Act XIX of 1853, which excuses witnesses from producing their own title-deeds, a provision which must, under an improved system of registration, become every dayess suited to India. Judges will, no doubt, protect witnesses from the production of their title deeds when they are not relevant and material to the cause.

We have not adopted in all respects the doctrines of the English law on the subject of th effect of previous decisions when adduced as evidence.

To those judgments, which are admitted by the laws of all other countries as conclusive evidence not only between the parties but as against strangers, we have affixed the same character in India; in all other cases, we have provided that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction upon a matter directly in issue shall be admissible as evidence between the same parties upon the same matter directly in issue in another cause, but that it shall not be conclusive. As regards strangers, we have provided that it shall be admissible merely as evidence that such judgment was pronounced between the parties.

We have thought that the court will arrive at the truth more accurately if left to draw their inference from the evidence given, than if fettered by rules of presumption, which are, in our opinion, incapable of being laid down so as to be universally applicable.

It may perhaps be made a question how far the subject of evidence falls under the head of substantive law, and some of the sections of the draft now submitted certainly border closely on procedure. Those sections, however, have not found a place in either of the Codes of Procedure. We have, therefore, inserted them (with some modifications), as it appears to us that the Law of Evidence ought not to be left to be gleaned from many different enactments, but, that so much of it as is not to be found in the Codes of Procedure should be, as far as possible comprised in the rules of law now submitted by us, and that the enactments which will thus be rendered unnecessary should be repealed.

We recommend the repeal of so much of Acts II of 1855 and XIX of 1833 as remains unrepealed, except s. 26 of the latter enactment, which does not form part of the Law of Evidence.

or, if it is produced after one year from such date ... ... twenty times such proper stamp duty or deficient portion thereof as aforesaid, shall certify by endorsement on such instrument that the proper stamp duty has been levied thereon.

Such certificate shall be conclusive as to the amount of stamp-duty [illegible]able on such instrument, and the said instrument shall thereupon be receivable in evidence as if originally executed on paper bearing the proper stamp.

19. An entry of every such payment showing the amount thereof shall be made in a book to be kept by the Court, and shall also be endorsed on the instrument and signed by the presiding officer,

Registration of penalties levied by civil courts.

The Court shall at the end of every month make a return to the Collector of the money (if any) which it has so received, distinguishing between the sums received by way of penalty and the sums received by way of duty, stating the number and title of the suit, the name of the party from whom the money was received, and the date (if any) and description of the instrument.

The Court shall pay over all money so received to the Collector or to such person as he may from time to time appoint to receive the same.

20. If it appear to a civil or criminal court that any instrument filed or exhibited in such court was executed on unstamped or insufficiently stamped paper with the manifest intention of evading payment of the stamp duty prescribed by this Act for such instrument, the Court may impound the instrument and send it to the Collector, and he shall thereupon prosecute the offender.

Impounding unstamped instruments in Courts.

21. If any instrument not bearing the stamp prescribed therefor by this Act is produced before any registering officer, or in any public office other than a civil or criminal court, the registering or other public officer shall impound the instrument, and send it forthwith to the Collector.

Impounding unstamped instruments in public office.

22. When any such instrument has been so sent or brought before the Collector, otherwise than for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication thereon, as hereinafter provided, he shall either proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section eighteen, exercising the powers thereby conferred on a civil court; or if it appear that the instrument was executed on unstamped, or insufficiently stamped, paper with the manifest intention of evading payment of the proper stamp duty, the Collector shall prosecute all the persons that have executed the said instrument or such of them as to him may seem fit:

Powers of Collector as to unstamped or insufficiently stamped instruments.

Prosecution.

Provided that in any case coming under this section, if where the instrument has been brought within one year from the date of its execution to the Collector or other public officer, by whom it has been sent to the Collector under section twenty-one, and if the Collector is satisfied that the omission or neglect to execute such instrument on paper bearing the proper stamp arose solely from urgent necessity or unavoidable accident, he may remit the penalty prescribed by section eighteen.

Remission of penalty.

Provided also that in any case coming under this section in which an instrument, other than a bill of exchange, purports to have been executed out of British India, if the Collector is satisfied that the instrument was so executed, and also that it has been brought to him within the two months next after its arrival in British India, he shall, on payment of the duty with which such instrument would have been chargeable if executed in British India, certify by indorsement thereon that the proper stamp duty has been levied upon it.

Such certificate shall be conclusive as to the amount of stamp duty leviable on the instrument, which shall thereupon be receivable in evidence as if originally executed on paper bearing the proper stamp.

23. When the Collector elects to proceed under section eighteen, he shall, after endorsing on the instrument the certificate thereby directed, return such instrument to the registering or other public officer by whom it was sent or to the person by whom it was produced, and the said instrument shall thereupon be, and be deemed to have been, as valid as if it was originally executed on paper bearing the proper stamp.

Validity of the instrument for which penalty is levied.

24. When any bill, cheque or order for the payment of money on demand, or any receipt, chargeable with the stamp duty of one anna comes to the hand of any person unstamped, he may affix thereto the necessary adhesive stamp, and cancel the same in the manner required by this Act, and upon so doing, may charge the duty against the person who ought to have paid the same, or deduct such duty from the sum so directed to be paid;

Power to stamp instruments chargeable with one anna.

Such bill, cheque, order or receipt shall, so far as relates to the stamp duty chargeable thereon, be valid; but this shall not relieve any person from the liability to the penalty which he may have incurred by issuing or giving the said bill, cheque, order or receipt unstamped.

25. Any person, or the agent of any person, from whom money or goods exceeding in amount or value Rupees twenty is or are due or claimed to be due, and who shall have paid such money, or delivered such goods, may provide a piece of paper with an adhesive stamp of one anna affixed thereto, and may require of the person entitled to such money or goods, or any agent to whom the same shall have been paid or delivered, a receipt for such money or goods and also the value of the said stamp.

Procedure where receipts are required.

If any person to whom money or goods shall have been so paid or delivered refuses to give such receipt upon demand thereof, or to pay the value of the said stamp thereon, he shall be liable for every such offence to a fine of Rupees one hundred.

Refusal to give receipts

26. Except as provided in section twenty-four, no stamp shall be affixed to, or impressed on, any instrument specified in Schedule I to this Act, subsequent to the execution thereof, nor shall the provisions of sections eighteen and twenty-two apply to any such instrument.

After-stamping when inadmissible.

CHAPTER IV.—Criminal Penalties.

Penalty for executing instrument on paper not duly stamped.

27. Whoever makes, signs or issues or, except as provided in section twenty-three, accepts, endorses, transfers, pays or receives payment of any bill of exchange, promissory note, cheque or other similar instrument liable to any of the duties hereby imposed without the same being duly stamped, and whoever makes, executes, or signs any other instrument liable to any of such duties without the same being duly stamped, shall, for every such instrument, be liable to fine not exceeding Rupees one hundred, or if ten times the value of the proper stamp or, in case an insufficient stamp has been used, ten times the deficient amount thereof, exceeds Rupees one hundred, then to fine not exceeding ten times such value or deficient amount.

Penalty for presenting, &c., unstamped bills of exchange.

28. Whoever presents for acceptance or for payment, or accepts, pays or endorses, transfers, or in any manner negotiates any such bill as aforesaid, whereon there is not such adhesive stamp as aforesaid duly affixed, shall be liable to the penalty prescribed by section twenty-seven.

Cancelling stamps on bills.

29. Whoever presents for acceptance or payment a bill of exchange to which an adhesive stamp has been affixed under Section nine, and whoever endorses, transfers, or in any manner negotiates such bill, shall, before delivering the same out of his hands, custody or power, cancel the stamp so affixed, by writing thereon his name or the initial letters thereof or the name of his firm, and the day and year on which he so writes the same or by affixing thereon or across the same, the seal or mark which he is in the habit of using, in such manner as to show that the stamp has been made use of, and so that the same shall not admit of being used again.

Penalty for failure to cancel such stamps.

And whoever ought, as directed by this Act to cancel such stamp in manner aforesaid, and refuses or neglects so to do, shall be liable to the penalty prescribed in section twenty-seven.

Penalty for post-dating bills of exchange.

30. Whoever, in order to evade the payment of the duty prescribed by this Act for such instrument, makes and issues any bill of exchange bearing a date subsequent to the date on which it is issued, and whoever knowing that such bill has been so post-dated, takes or receives such bill, or accepts, pays, endorses, transfers or in any manner negotiates the same, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding Rupees five hundred.

Cancellation of adhesive stamp by maker or executant.

31. Whenever an adhesive stamp is used as hereinbefore authorized, the person making or executing the instrument to which such stamp is affixed shall, before delivering the instrument out of his hands, custody or power, cancel the stamp so used by writing thereon his name or the initial letters thereof, or the name of his firm, and the date on which such instrument is made or executed, so that such stamp shall not admit of being used again.

Penalty for not cancelling stamp.

Whoever makes or signs any instrument with an adhesive stamp thereon when an adhesive stamp is allowed to be used, and does not bonâ fide in manner aforesaid cancel such stamp, shall be liable to fine not exceeding Rupees one hundred.

Consideration to be stated.

32. When any moveable or immoveable property is sold, the full consideration-money directly or indirectly paid or secured, or agreed to be paid for the same, shall be truly set forth in words at length in the principal or only instrument whereby the property sold is conveyed to, or vested in, the purchaser or in any other person by his direction.

Property sold subject to mortgage or charge.

When any property is sold and conveyed subject to any mortgage or bond or other debt, or to any gross or entire sum of money, such debt or sum shall be deemed the consideration-money or part of the consideration money (as the case may be) in respect whereof the duty chargeable under Schedule III to this Act shall be paid, notwithstanding the purchaser is not or does not become personally liable for such debt or sum, or does not agree to pay the same or to indemnify the purchaser against the same.

Penalty for not stating consideration.

If the full consideration-money is not set forth as aforesaid, the purchaser and the seller shall each be liable to fine not exceeding Rupees five hundred, and shall also pay a fine of five times the amount of the excess of duty with which such instrument would have been chargeable under this Act, if the full consideration-money had been duly set forth in such instrument in addition to the duty actually paid for the same.

Penalty on attorneys, &c., not inserting true consideration.

33. Any attorney, vakeel, pleader, mukhtár or other person employed in or about the preparing of any instrument in or upon which the full consideration-money is hereby required to be truly set forth, or employed for any of the parties thereto in anywise about or relating to the transaction therein mentioned, who inserts or sets forth, or causes to be inserted or set forth, in or upon any such instrument any other than the full consideration money, or abets, within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, the doing thereof respectively, shall, for every such offence, pay a fine not less than Rupees five hundred and not exceeding Rupees five thousand.

Every attorney, vakeel, pleader, or mukhtár convicted under this section shall from the date of such conviction be disabled to practise as an attorney, vakeel, pleader, or mukhtár.

Provided that no person shall be liable to any penalty or disability under this section, unless the duty actually paid for the instrument is less than would have been payable for the same in case the consideration-money had been truly set forth as aforesaid.

Recovery of fines.

34. All fines imposed under this Act may be recovered, if for offences committed outside the local limits of the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, in the manner prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure, and if for offences committed within those limits, in the manner prescribed by any Act regulating the Police of such towns in force for the time being.

Reward to informers.

35. Whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine under this Act, the convicting Magistrate may award any portion not exceeding one half to the person on whose information the offender has been convicted.

CHAPTER V.—JURISDICTION.

Adjudication of doubt as to proper stamp.

36. When any instrument chargeable with stamp duty under this Act, whether previously stamped or not, is presented to the Collector, and the person presenting it desires to have the opinion of that officer as to the duty with which it is so chargeable, and pays a fee of five Rupees, the Collector shall assess and charge the duty to which, in his judgment, the instrument is liable; and upon payment of such duty or of such a sum as, with the duty already paid thereon, is equal to the duty so assessed and charged, and of the penalty, if any, incurred through the instrument having been executed on insufficiently stamped paper, shall certify by endorsement on such instrument, that the full duty with which it is chargeable under this Act has been paid.

The instrument shall thereupon be deemed to be duly stamped and receivable in evidence or otherwise in all courts and public offices:

Provided that nothing contained in the former part of this section shall authorize the Collector to make any such endorsement on an instrument comprised in Schedule I to this Act, and presented on unstamped or insufficiently stamped paper subsequent to the execution thereof.

Appeal against Collector's decision.

37. If the person presenting any such instrument, is dissatisfied with the judgment of the Collector, he may, upon paying the duty assessed by such judgment, including the penalty, if any, which would be leviable under section twenty-two if the instrument were produced in a civil court, and upon depositing twenty Rupees for costs and charges, require the Collector to state specially and sign the case on which the question arose, together with his judgment thereon, and the Collector shall state and sign such case accordingly, and deliver it to the person making such requisition in order that he may appeal to the High Court.

And upon the application of the appellant (notice being given to the Government pleader) the High Court shall hear the appeal and decide as to the stamp duty with which the instrument is chargeable under this Act, and award the costs (if any) payable by the appellant; and according to such decision the duty and penalty, if any, shall be deemed to have been payable.

If no excess of duty or penalty has been paid under the Collector's judgment, the amount deposited by the appellant shall be paid to Government, but if any such excess has been paid, the same, together with the amount of the deposit, shall be re-paid to the appellant.

And if the sum paid for duty or penalty falls short of what, according to the decision of the High Court, ought to have been paid, the deficiency of duty, or penalty, or both, shall be paid by the appellant, and the Collector may enforce the payment thereof accordingly as if it were arrears of land revenue.

Revision of Collector's orders.

38. All orders of the Collector under this Act, except such as are passed under Section thirty-six, shall be open to revision on appeal or otherwise by the chief controlling revenue authority to which the Collector is subordinate.

Reference to High Court.

39. The chief controlling revenue authority may refer to the High Court any question arising in a case coming before such authority on appeal or otherwise as to the proper stamp prescribed by this Act for any instrument, stating specially the case on which the question arose.

The High Court shall take cognizance of every case so referred, and decide as to the stamp duty with which the instrument is chargeable, and such decision shall be final as to the duty to be charged on such instrument.

Power to remit or mitigate penalties.

40. The chief controlling revenue authority may, upon petition, remit or mitigate any penalty imposed under this Act.

Institution of prosecutions.

41. All prosecutions in respect of any offence punishable by this Act, shall be instituted by the Collector of the District, or other officer specially authorized by the Government in that behalf.

Jurisdiction of Magistrate.

42. Offences punishable under this Act may be tried by any Magistrate who would, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, have jurisdiction to try offences for which corresponding penalties are provided by the Indian Penal Code.

CHAPTER VI.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Refund in case of useless or spoiled stamped paper.

43. If any person who has obtained any stamped paper in the manner allowed by this Act, or Act No. X of 1862, (to consolidate and amend the Law relating to Stamp Duties) does not require the same for use, or if the paper so obtained becomes spoiled or unfit for use as hereinafter mentioned, the Collector of the District in which the paper has been purchased may, upon application made within one year after such purchase, and upon delivery of such paper, refund the amount actually paid for the same, or in case the owner of the paper which has become spoiled or unfit for use, desires to be supplied with stamped paper of similar or equal value, the Collector may cause such paper to be delivered to him or his agent upon payment of the value of the paper on which the new stamp or stamps shall be impressed.

When stamped paper shall be held to be spoiled.

44. Stamped paper shall be held to be spoiled or unfit for use within the meaning of section forty-three when—

By accident happening to the same before any writing thereupon has been finally signed and executed, it is rendered unfit for use;

Or when, because of some error in the drawing up or copying of any writing thereon discovered before such writing has been finally signed and executed, it is rendered of no avail;

Or when, by reason of death or refusal of the party whose signature may be necessary to effect the transaction intended by such writing, it remains incomplete and of no avail;

Or when, by refusal of any office or trust granted by a writing thereon, it has failed of the purpose intended;

Or when, by reason of failure of consideration, the transaction intended to be effected or evidenced by a writing thereon cannot be effected or evidenced;

Or when the transaction intended to be effected by a writing thereon has been effected by some other instrument duly stamped;

Or when, in the case of a negotiable instrument, such instrument is, by reason of non-delivery to the payee or person acting in his behalf, or other cause, never brought into use;

Or when, in the case of a bill of exchange other than a bill drawn in a set, it has not been presented for acceptance.

Suit where consideration is not stated.

45. Where in case of a sale, or an exchange upon which money is paid for equality of exchange, or a lease for a premium, the full consideration-money is not truly set forth in the manner hereby directed, it shall be lawful for the purchaser, or the person paying money for equality of exchange, or the lessee (as the case may be) or his heir, executor or administrator, to sue for and recover back from the seller, or the person receiving such money, or the lessor (as the case may be) or his heir, executor or administrator, so much of the consideration-money as is not set forth as aforesaid, or the whole thereof, if no part of the same is so set forth; and in such suit, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, the conveyance, instrument of exchange, or lease shall be receivable in evidence.

Power to make rules for sale of stamps.

46. Every Local Government shall frame rules for regulating the sale of stamps and stamped paper required by this Act, for determining the persons by whom such sale is to be conducted, and for fixing the remuneration of such persons within the territories subject to its control; and may from time to time alter and add to such rules.

Such rules, alterations and additions shall, when approved by the Governor General of India in Council, and after publication in the local official Gazette, have the force of law.

Supply of stamps and stamped paper.

47. Every Local Government shall cause a sufficient supply of adhesive stamps and stamped papers of the several denominations specified in Schedule V to this Act to be provided and kept for sale at all convenient places within the territories subject to its control.

Employment of single stamp.

48. The amount of any stamp required by this Act shall be denoted by a single stamp, except when such amount exceeds Rupees one thousand, in which case it may be denoted by two or more stamps, the aggregate amount of which shall be the amount so required:

Provided that where a single stamped paper of any amount less than Rupees one thousand is not procurable on application to the proper officer, it shall be lawful, on such officer making a certificate to that effect, for the person requiring such stamp to denote the amount by two or more stamps, the aggregate amount of which shall be the amount so required.

Employment of several stamped papers.

49. When more stamped papers than one are used, under the former part of section forty-eight, for an instrument chargeable with stamp duty under this Act, each stamped paper so used shall contain a part of the instrument.

Act to be translated, indexed and sold cheaply.

50. Every Local Government shall cause this Act to be carefully translated into the principal vernacular languages of the territories subject to its control. A full alphabetical index shall be added to every such translation, and the translation and index shall be printed and sold to the public at a price not exceeding four annas per copy.

NOTIFICATIONS.

Simla, the 28th October 1868.

No. 3287.

In modification of the Notification by the Government of India, No. 3517 of the 23rd November 1864, the Governor General of India in Council is pleased to direct that, from and after the publication of this Notification, sovereigns and half sovereigns coined at any authorized Royal Mint in England or Australia of current weight shall be received in all the Treasuries of British India and its dependencies in payment of sums due to the Government, as the equivalent of ten rupees and four annas, and five rupees and two annas respectively; and that such sovereigns shall, whenever available at any Government Treasury, be paid at the same rates to any person willing to receive them in payment of claims against the Government. The gold pieces stated in Section XIII of Act XVII of 1835 will also henceforth be received as above according to the values stated in that Act.

From E. H. LUSHINGTON, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, Financial Department, to the Acting Secretary to the Government of Fort St. George,—No. 3354, dated 29th October 1868.

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 2283 of the 28th August 1868, requesting that the order of the Government of Fort Saint George, No. 2246, dated the 24th idem, granting privilege leave for fourteen days to Mr. W. H. Bliss, Acting Sub-Collector of Madura, may be confirmed, and suggesting "that general orders may be issued by the Government of India to the effect that when an Officer cancels a portion of his privilege leave under the orders of Government, and not for his own convenience, the limitation in Rule XX" of the new rules regarding leave of absence to Covenanted Civil Servants "shall not operate in his case."

2. The order on the case of Mr. Bliss, I am desired to state, is confirmed.

3. His Excellency the Governor General in Council is pleased to rule that when a Covenanted Civil Servant, absent on privilege leave, is re-called to duty for the convenience of Government, he may be allowed the balance of his leave before the expiry of six months from the date of his return to duty.

ORDERED, that the foregoing letter be published in the Gazette of India, and communicated to the Foreign, Home, and Public Works Departments; the Governments of Bengal, Bombay, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab; the Comptroller General of Accounts; the Director General of the Post Office of India; the Mint Master, Calcutta; the Head Commissioner of Paper Currency, Calcutta; the Accountants General in Bengal, Madras, Bombay, the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and British Burmah; and the Deputy Accountants General in the Central Provinces, Hyderabad, and Mysore.

Captain (Brevet Major) Thomas Henry Salt, of the Royal Artillery, Commandant, No. 3 Horse Light Field Battery, Punjab Frontier Force	For 20 months, under the Regulations of 1854.

No. 1009 of 1868.—The following paragraph of a Military letter from the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India, No. 283, dated 26th August 1868, is published for general information :—

Para. 4.—Having forwarded, for the consideration of the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, the papers relating to the claim of Deputy Inspector General of Hospitals * * * to count towards the relative rank of Colonel the period during which he officiated on the full pay of a Deputy Inspector General, His Royal Highness has informed me that in the British service a Deputy Inspector General of substantive rank alone can claim the relative rank of Colonel, and that only from the actual date of the Gazette in which his appointment is notified, and that under no circumstances does a merely officiating appointment so qualify. As recommended by His Royal Highness, the same rule should be observed in the Indian service.

No. 1010 of 1868.—The 101st Royal Bengal Fusiliers being about to proceed to England, His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council cannot allow this Regiment, the nucleus of which has existed in this Presidency in some shape or another for more than two hundred years, and which has been formed as a Regiment—expanding at times into several Battalions—for one hundred and twelve years, to take its departure without expressing, in the strongest terms, the appreciation of the Government of India of its most valuable and distinguished services.

Successively as the Bengal European Regiment, the 1st European Regiment, the 1st European Light Infantry, and the 1st Bengal European Fusiliers, the Regiment served the Hon'ble the East India Company for more than one hundred years; and, besides being actively engaged in nearly every part of its own Presidency, was detached to the Northern Circars of the Madras Presidency in 1758, and has subsequently served out of Bengal in the Carnatic, in Java, in the Island of Celebes, in Affghanistan, from Ghuznee in one direction, to Pushoot, on the borders of Koonur, in another, and in Burmah.

The distinguished conduct in the field of the Regiment as the senior Battalion of Infantry of the Bengal Army, was proverbial, and its colors are covered with the names of operations in which it bore a prominent part. Some are not thus recorded, but the following list includes all the more important of the campaigns, battles, and sieges in which the Regiment has been engaged :—

Defence of Fort William against Suraj-oo-dowlah in 1756, when the four Companies of which the Corps was composed, were almost annihilated.

Capture of the Fort of Budge-Budge; re-capture of Calcutta; battle of Chitpore; siege and capture of Chandernagore; capture of the Fort of Kutwa; and battle of Plassey, 1756-1757.

Campaign against the French in the Northern Circars in 1758, including the battle of Condore, and siege and capture of Masulipatam.

Defeat of a Dutch force at Bedarrah, 8th November 1759.

Campaign against the Emperor of Delhi, 1760-61, including the battles of Seerpore, Beerpore, and Suan, in which latter the French mercenaries were defeated, and their leader, the celebrated Monsieur Law, taken prisoner.

War against Meer Kassim, ex-Nawab of Moorshedabad, 1763 to 1765, and present at the battle of Manjee, near Patna, where four Companies were overwhelmed and destroyed after a gallant resistance; battle of Kutwah; capture of Moorshedabad; battle of Gheriah; storm of the lines of Oodwah Nullah; capture of Mongheer; siege and storm of Patna; action near Patna, 3rd May 1764; battle of Buxar; assault of Chunar, and battle of Kulpee.

In 1774, in the first Rohilla campaign under Colonel Champion, including the decisive action on St. George's day of that year, when Hafiz Rehmut was killed.

Four Companies employed against Hyder Allee, in the Carnatic, from 1780 to 1783, and present at the relief of Wandiwash; battles of Porto Novo, Polilore, Solinghur, Veracundalore; relief of Vellore; battle of Arnee, and siege of Cuddalore.

Again employed in the second Rohilla war, under Major General Sir Robert Abercrombie, and suffered severely at the battle of Bittoorah on the 26th October 1794.

In Lord Lake's campaigns against the Maharattas, 1804-1805; at the battle of Deig; siege and storm of Deig; and the first siege of Bhurtpore.

In Java from 1812 to 1815, and in the Island of Celebes in 1816.

A Detachment employed in the Terai during part of the Nepaul war, and two Companies employed against the Pindarees in 1817-1818.

The Right Wing of the Regiment at the siege and capture of Bhurtpore, 1826, and engaged in the assault.

Joined the Army of the Indus in November 1838, and served during the first campaign in Affghanistan, 1839-1840, and prominently engaged at the storm of Ghuznee. A Detachment was employed at the attack on the Fort of Pushoot in January 1840.

On the Sikhs crossing the Sutledge in December 1845, the Regiment moved from the hills by rapid forced marches, and was engaged at the battles of Ferozeshuhur and Sobraon, losing 20 officers and 392 men killed and wounded.

Engaged in the Burmese war, 1852-1853, and present at the re-capture of Pegu; relief of the Pegu garrison, and subsequent operations in the vicinity of that place.

In May 1857, on the outbreak of the Indian Mutiny, moved with great rapidity, notwithstanding the intense heat, to Umballa, and thence marched on Delhi. Was one of the four Regiments of British Infantry that served throughout the siege of that place, from the action of Budlee-ka-Serai, on the 8th June 1857, to the final capture of the city, on the 20th September; and was repeatedly distinguished, especially in the assault, where it formed part of the column led by Brigadier General John Nicholson. The Regiment lost 14 officers and 305 men killed and wounded at Delhi.

Served subsequently during the latter part of 1857 and in 1858 at the actions of Narnoul, Gungeree, Puttiallee, and Mynpooree; at the siege and capture of Lucknow, and in various minor affairs in Oudh.

These services, which can hardly be surpassed by those of any Regiment in existence, were rendered when the Corps belonged to the Army of the Hon'ble the East India Company.

In 1861, the Regiment became Her Majesty's 101st Royal Bengal Fusiliers, and since then, as one of Her Majesty's Regiments of the Line, was employed in the operations at Umbeyla in October, November, and December 1863, and well maintained its previous reputation in the various struggles with a brave foe throughout that arduous service.

The 101st Regiment now proceeds to England for its first turn of Home service, and it leaves India full of honor and with a reputation for discipline and efficiency, as the Governor General in Council is assured by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, quite worthy of its character for gallantry and endurance.

The Governor General in Council is convinced that wherever the 101st Regiment goes, it will maintain its ancient renown, and His Excellency in Council desires to assure the Regiment that the Government of India is proud to send such a Corps to take its place in England with the Battalions of Her Most Gracious Majesty there stationed.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

PROGRESS REPORT OF MILITARY WORKS THROUGHOUT INDIA FOR 1867-68.

NOTE on the Progress to the close of the Year 1867-68 in providing Barrack Accommodation for European Troops throughout India on the present improved scale, and in the execution of other general Military Works.

Preliminary.

The first Statement was submitted in September of last year (1867), and I have now the honor to submit the second, with the following remarks :—

Form of Statement of 1866-67 adhered to with slight modifications.

2. I have adhered to last year's form which showed the comparison between the programme sketched out in the original estimate of 10 millions sterling and the actual progress that has been achieved since 1864-65; but instead of exhibiting the expenditure and budget grants in several columns, I have given the necessary information in two columns only, viz., "total expenditure to the close of the year under review," and "budget grant for the ensuing year," or the year now current, 1868-69.

No details of progress received from Madras and Bombay.

Sanctions by Local Governments not included in statement.

Minor works not noticed.

3. I would further observe that no details of progress have yet been received from either Madras or Bombay; that only a very few major works that have been sanctioned by Local Governments appear in the Statement; and that no notice whatever has been taken of minor works.

Lump sum entries made in final abstract for Bombay and Madras, and for sanctions by Local Governments.

4. I have, however, been able to include in the general abstract, in lump sums, the total expenditure in Madras and Bombay, and also the total expenditure on major works that have been sanctioned by Local Governments, so that in addition to a review of the details of progress for the Presidency of Bengal, a good idea may be formed of the general progress that has been made throughout India.

General results throughout India.

5. I would now beg to draw attention to the "general results" as exhibited in the final abstract at page 71. From this it will be seen that, out of the total estimate of 10 millions sterling, projects to the extent of $6\frac{1}{2}$ millions had been dealt with by the Government of India, viz., $3\frac{1}{4}$ millions by sanctioned estimates, and $3\frac{1}{4}$ millions by approved rough projects; and further that an expenditure of rather more than $3\frac{3}{4}$ millions had been actually incurred.

General results in Bengal Presidency.

6. As regards the Presidency of Bengal only, projects to the extent of 6 millions, out of the estimate of $6\frac{3}{4}$ millions, had been dealt with by the Government of India, viz., by complete estimates $2\frac{3}{4}$ millions, by approved rough projects $3\frac{1}{4}$ millions. The projects disposed of in this Presidency during the year under review amounted to about $2\frac{3}{4}$ millions, viz., sanctioned estimates $1\frac{1}{2}$ millions, approved rough projects $1\frac{1}{4}$ millions. The expenditure, including allowance for establishments, may be set down at $2\frac{1}{2}$ millions, which sum represents rather more than one-third of the estimated programme.

Reference made to detailed abstract for Bengal Presidency.

7. I would now draw attention to the abstracts at pages 66 to 70, which give the general results in more detail than the general abstract, for the several Local Governments and Administrations in the Bengal Presidency.

NEW SETS OF BUILDINGS.—HILL SANATARIA.

8. These two headings comprise the most important item of the programme, viz., the provision of accommodation for the European troops on the improved scale. The estimated programme amounts to 4 millions. Detailed estimates had been sanctioned to the extent of $2\frac{1}{4}$ millions, and the expenditure had nearly reached $1\frac{3}{4}$ millions. Judging from the rough projects that have been dealt with, there can be little doubt that the programme will be exceeded under this heading, but there will be compensating savings under other heads. The progress during the year has been on the whole satisfactory.

IMPROVEMENT OF EXISTING BUILDINGS.

9. As observed in the last report, the Statement does not show the full progress under this heading, as it is to this class of works that the sanctions of Local Governments chiefly relate. The amount provided for in the programme is rather more than $1\frac{1}{2}$ millions. The expenditure has probably not exceeded one-fourth of a million, and there will no doubt be considerable saving under this heading. The most important works relate to the improvement of the barracks at Berhampoor, Cawnpoor, Umballa, Jubbulpoor, Mhow, and Lucknow, at which stations many of the old buildings were sufficiently good for adaptation to permanent use.

FORTIFIED POSTS.

10. It was explained in the last report that the programme would be much exceeded under this heading. When the programme was prepared, nothing had been settled with regard to these posts, and, therefore, provision was only made for an expenditure (£200,000) that might possibly be incurred during the four or five years to which only the programme was intended to relate; but since then, it has been decided that a fortified position shall be provided as a place of refuge, at every important military station, including more than usually extensive works at Peshawur, Mooltan, and Rawul Pindee. The expenditure to the close of the year under review had exceeded half the estimate, having reached the sum of £ 128,000.

GENERAL CANTONMENT WORKS.

11. Such as water-supply, drainage, &c., &c.—It is only necessary to observe that works under this head fall mainly within the province of Local Governments to sanction. There will probably be considerable saving in the estimate.

TEMPORARY ACCOMMODATION.

12. There has been no necessity for any new works of this class during the year. There will be a saving of nearly 3½ lakhs under this heading.

ORDNANCE AND COMMISSARIAT BUILDINGS.

13. The estimate under this heading will be considerably exceeded. The most important works are the Gun-powder Factory at Ishapoor, nearly completed, the Gun Carriage Agency at Allahabad, and Tannery Buildings at Cawnpoor, on both of which considerable progress has been effected.

OFFICERS' QUARTERS.

14. There will be saving under this heading. The estimate is 15 lakhs, and the expenditure to close of 1867-68 only a little in excess of 3 lakhs. Since the last report was submitted, it has been decided to provide quarters for the regimental officers at Allahabad.

ACCOMMODATION FOR NATIVE TROOPS.

15. But little has been done under this heading, as the Government only provides shelter for Native troops in exceptional cases.

Progress in providing accommodation for European troops.

16. I will now very briefly refer to the progress that has been made in the all important work of providing accommodation in the several provinces for the European troops. The details on this point will be found at pages 5 to 35 of the Statement.

BENGAL.

Hazareebaugh. Dinapoor. Darjeeling. Barrackpoor.

17. But very little work has been done in Bengal, as nothing had been definitely settled in regard to the arrangements for the stations of Hazareebaugh, Dinapoor, and Darjeeling. The only important project that has been in hand is the erection of the new barracks for two Batteries of Artillery at Barrackpoor. Fair progress has been made on them.

NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES.

Allahabad.

18. The new barracks for the Regiment of Infantry and Battery of Artillery at Allahabad have been vigorously pushed forward, and it is hoped that they will be occupied in the spring of 1869.

Cawnpoor

Good work has also been done at Cawnpoor.

Moradabad.

A commencement has been made at Moradabad.

Benares.

Nothing has been done at Benares, as the question of the site for the new Cantonment has not been settled.

Chukrata. Raneekhet.

Preliminary operations have been arranged for commencing work at the new hill stations of Chukrata and Raneekhet.

PUNJAB.

Delhi. Mooltan. Jullundhur.

19. Good progress has been effected at most of the large stations in the Punjab, particularly at Delhi, Mooltan, and Jullundhur. Several of the barracks at Delhi have been occupied for some time, and it is probable that many new buildings at other stations will be ready for occupation before the hot weather of 1869.

OUDH.

Lucknow. Seetapoor Fyzabad.

20. Since the last report was submitted, six new half-company barracks have been set in hand, and half finished at Lucknow; eight new barracks have been commenced, of which three have been half finished at Seetapoor, and at Fyzabad considerable progress has been made with the family quarters.

BRITISH BURMAH.

Thayetmyo.

21. The new barracks at Thayetmyo have been nearly completed.

CENTRAL PROVINCES.

Jubbulpoor. Saugor. Kamtee. Seetabuldee.

22. At Jubbulpoor, the improvement of the existing Infantry barracks has been completed. At Saugor, four new half-company barracks have been completed and occupied, and the new hospital for the Infantry has been considerably advanced. At Kamptee, the existing accommodation has been much improved, and arrangements have been set in hand for erecting entirely new buildings for the whole of the European troops. At Seetabuldee, the new barrack in the fort has been nearly carried to completion.

HYDERABAD.

Trimulgherry.

23. The progress at this large station continues to be very satisfactory.

CENTRAL INDIA.

Morar. Fortress Gwalior. Nowgong. Mhow.

24. The new buildings are also progressing very rapidly at Morar and in the Fortress of Gwalior. Several have been completed and occupied. A good commencement has been made at Nowgong; and at Mhow, too, the progress has been very satisfactory, considering the difficulty of procuring labour and material.

It has very recently been decided that Sydun Baolee is to be occupied permanently by the following garrison :—

2 Batteries of Horse Artillery.
1 Regiment of Cavalry.
1 „ of British Infantry.

The buildings hitherto provided at Sydun Baolee were designed to meet the wants of a Squadron of Dragoons, with special reference to the experimental occupation of the station. New barracks, &c., for the entire permanent garrison will now have to be provided.

		This project includes the provision of permanent barrack accommodation for the European garrison to be located in the fortified enclosure (See also section I of this Statement). The general project was for some time under discussion, and the final orders thereon have only lately been issued. Preliminary arrangements have been made by the local authorities for the commencement of work. Funds have been provided for this work in the Budget Estimate for 1868-69.
		UMBALLA.
		It has been decided by the Government of India with reference to the provision of a fortified post or place of refi ge at this station, that, if possible, it should be arranged for in connection with the railway station, but that if such an arrangement is not practicable, the matter may be deferred until a suitable opportunity occurs for otherwise providing for it.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

REPORT ON THE PROSPECTS OF TRADE IN CENTRAL ASIA.

From Dr. H. CAYLEY, on Special Duty, Ladák, to the Secretary to Government of Punjab,—No. 17, dated 8th September 1868.

During the past week many merchants have arrived from Yarkand, and among them a party of Kábulis, the chief of whom, two men named Sher Muhammad Khan and Khairodeen, have, for the last 20 years, been residents of Kokan and Kashgar, and have been trading on the side of Russia and Bokhara; but they now say that, owing to the unsettled state of those countries, and the high duties charged in the Russian territories, there is no longer any profit to be made, and the chief merchants who formerly went to Bokhara are seeking a new opening on this side; and hearing that traders are now well treated on this road and relieved from all oppressive duties, Sher Muhammad and several others have this year come over to Ladák, and are going on to Pilampore and the Punjab to satisfy themselves whether the route is favorable for their mercantile pursuits. The two men above named have brought no merchandize with them beyond a few bales of most exquisite Kokán silk, but they have brought ten or twelve good horses and ponies, and about Rs. 800 in silver and gold, and are going to Kangra to buy tea only. There is a sale for any quantity of tea now in Yarkand. Common black tea from Bokhara (brought from Bombay), which the people only take because they can get no other, sells at Rs. 3 per lb., and good green tea is selling at Rs. 5 and even higher. The report of every merchant who comes over is that there is hardly any limit to the amount of tea that can be disposed of in Yarkand and the provinces to the east, now that the supply from China is quite cut off. They also say that they can sell tea to the Russian merchants in Kokan, and if they find that this year tea in sufficient quantity and suitable quality can be procured in India, and that they meet with no unfair treatment on the road, the influential merchants of Kokan and Kashgar, who have hitherto traded in the direction of Bokhara, will all turn towards Ladák and the Punjab. With the party of Sher Muhammad is a Kandahári merchant, named Secandar Khan, who is also bound for Kangra solely to purchase tea; he has two or three horses and between three and four thousand Rupees in cash. A merchant, named Hamit Khan, also went down two or three weeks ago, with some Rs. 3 or 4,000 in silver and gold for the same purpose. And two merchants of Andijan, who are now here, have silk and gold, and silver worth some Rs. 50,000, and are just starting for the Punjab to purchase tea and indigo, and a few expensive articles as brocades. These men all refuse to trade in Lé, as they have decided to go direct to the sources of supply. Sher Muhammad proposes to go back by the Changchinmo route, and if he finds it feasible, he is ready in future seasons to bring his goods over on camels; and there is no reason why camels should not go on to the Punjab by Lahoul and Kullu; a little more labor on the road would render it quite fit for the Bactrian camels which regularly traverse the difficult mountain of the Pamir steppe between Yarkand and Badakshan.

2. The possibility of an extensive and valuable trade being established between India and Eastern Turkistan is often disputed, and it has been described as a chimera; but everything that I now see and hear in connection with the subject, and the present busy state of the Lé bazár, all tend to confirm the impression that I received last year, that the trade is capable of enormous development. The raw products from Central Asia, as pushm, silk, bhang, and gold, can be supplied in almost any amount, besides manufactured silks, carpets, felts, and stone ornaments which are much prized in India. In return, the people of Eastern Turkistan are ready to take over teas, cotton and woolen goods, dyed skins, spices, and other articles. The Russian merchants are fully aware of the value of this market for their wares, and speak of the trade between Russia and Chinese Turkistan as being "absolutely necessary"—so enormous do they consider it; and the merchants and Governors of Russian Turkistan have been doing their utmost to open it out. If we now continue to encourage it, there is great hope of seeing a friendly rivalry between the English and Russian merchants in Yarkand, which could hardly fail to prove beneficial to both countries. In such a competition the British merchants, with the productions of England and India, will always have the best of it, as even now British goods in the Yarkand bazár get far higher prices than Russian ones; and at the same time can be supplied cheaper. The cost of carriage is less, in spite of having to cross the Himalayas. The value of the imports into Lé during the month of August, amounting to only one lakh of rupees (besides which, however, a large amount of gold and silver coin was brought, which does not appear in my returns) is no criterion of the extent to which the trade is capable of extending. The enormous prices the Yarkandis are now offering for articles of pure luxury, the extravagant sums they ask for any moderately good horse or pony, the substantial well-to-do appearance, both in person and dress, not only of the merchants, but of their servants and followers, and people of all classes, all point to a far greater degree of wealth and prosperity, and consequently capacity for trade than one generally finds among eastern nations, and contrasts remarkably with the inexpensive tastes and habits and meagre appearance of the people of Hindustan. I may mention the following instances as an illustration of this :—

Gold has lately risen considerably in value in Yarkand, though there is an unlimited supply in the Kokan mines; but the people, no longer being forced to work in the mines by Kushbegi as they were by the Chinese, prefer agriculture and rearing silk-worms to digging gold, and the supply of the metal has consequently fallen off.

One of the merchants brought up the other day from Calcutta some bales of fine figured muslins of bright colours. Directly these were shown, the Yarkandis offered for them Rs. 16 the piece (they cost Rs. 6 in Calcutta, and Re. 1 carriage), first picking out the most showy, which they said would be admired for women's dresses. They say that these muslins will sell in Yarkand at Rs. 25 the piece.

Last year nearly 900 score of "Lakhi"—red goat skins—were imported into Yarkand from the Punjab, and this year they are coming in still larger quantities. These are worth in Yarkand, at the present price of about Rs. 2 each, some Rs. 35,000. Almost the only use of these skins is for making red tops to their boots. They have other kinds of leather which are much cheaper, but they prefer the bright red of these Hindustani Lakhi, and can afford to pay £3,500 a year in ornamenting their boots with them, and they say that ten times the quantity would find a sale. The great demand for tea, spices, and such articles of luxury show a high state of prosperity.

Of course the revival or establishment of commercial enterprise in a new direction is a work of time, especially between countries so far apart as Hindustan and Central Asia, where the merchants can hardly go and return in one season, but everything tends to show that with fair play the trade in a few years will come up to the highest expectations. I do not think that any other line of road is so good as that through Ladák for Yarkand, which is the great mart of Eastern Turkistan. The route by Badakshan is longer, and in no repect easier; and the shorter road through Chitral is described by all the merchants, who have traversed it, as excessively difficult and dangerous.

The present state of affairs may of course be changed in a day by Yarkand being swallowed up by the onward advance of Russia, as has been the fate of the countries to the north and west; and the merchants openly talk of this. It is quite possible that only good might result from such a change; but as Yakub Kushbegi is undoubtedly an able and liberal-minded ruler, who has apparently the welfare of his country at heart, and has introduced many liberal reforms in his Government (he is said to have stopped the slave trade), one cannot help feeling that the permanence of his rule is a desirable event.

3. The latest news from Yarkand is that an advance detachment of Kushbegi's troops sent out towards the Naryn river had met with and defeated a party of Cossacks and Kipchaks, and driven them back across the river, and then destroyed the bridge built there by the Russians. The Yarkandis are said to be now erecting a fort to guard the crossing, and Kushbegi is sending reinforcements to their aid. This is the first rumour of any act of hostility between Yarkand and Russia.

4. Several meetings have lately been held amogst the marchants for the purpose of discussing matters connected with trade. At these meetings Mr. Forsyth, who has recently paid a visit to Lé, and who takes so deep and active an interest in the subject, was present, and many important matters were freely ventilated and discussed. The principal complaints urged against this route were—

I.—The difficulty in procuring, and great expense of, carriage. Both last year and this great trouble and delay were experienced in Lahoul on account of the scarcity of beasts of burden, as the Kangra carriers refuse to go beyond the Rotang Pass. Mr. Forsyth has now arranged with Negi Tara Chand for the supply of additional yaks and ponies.

II.—Another great source of complaint was the systematic robberies carried on by the Lahoulis on all goods passing through. Scarcely a merchant escapes; the bales are opened, some of the contents extracted, and the packages carefully sewn up again. On this point too Mr. Forsyth has made arrangements for the better detection and punishment of such thefts. In Ladák the want of carriage is felt, but in a less degree. In future years the chief merchants will, I believe, generally take their own carriage right through, which would at once remove all these troubles. and the expense of carriage would be greatly reduced.

The traders all complain this year of having to pay transit duty on tea, which used to pass free, and also that the new tariff increases the duty on piece goods, silk, and other expensive articles. A petition on these points has been sent to His Highness the Maharajah, and I hope that the liberal views he is now taking as regards trade may induce him to lessen the duty on some of the articles which pay much more highly under the new than under the old scale, and there is little doubt that his revenues would directly benefit by such reductions. The Yarkandis complained of the annoyances they were subjected to from their goods being frequently searched, also that many articles in use, such as saddle-cloths, &c., were charged duty, and also of the difficulty they had in procuring food and forage in Lé. I have talked over these points with the Cashmir officials who were present at all these meetings, and all have now been satisfactorily settled. Much good has resulted from these meetings, at which the merchants spoke out freely and openly; and the presence of Mr. Forsyth, who is so intimately acquainted with all matters connected with the Central Asian trade, was of the most valuable assistance.

5. I am now carrying on vaccination much more extensively than before and the results are most favorable. In June, owing to the objections made by the traders going to Garo and Chanthang, I discontinued, and only vaccinated two or three children a week to keep up the supply of lymp; in that month 16 were vaccinated. In July nothing was done. In August I re-commenced, not so much in Lé itself, as the people, chiefly Mussulmans and half-caste, seemed to object, but in the villages round, where the people, as soon as they saw that no illness resulted, were most anxious to be vaccinated. The whole of the children and unprotected people in three villages, numbering 130, were vaccinated during the month, and scarcely one case was unsuccessful. This month I have continued vaccinating in the neighbouring villages, and the people come from places five and six days' journey distant, and beg me to go out and vaccinate in their villages; this I propose doing as much as my time will admit of, but really to carry on vaccination extensively takes up a person's whole time. I have now taught a Lama, who formerly practised inoculation, to vaccinate; but I cannot yet trust him to go to a distance where I cannot inspect his work, as it is better not to vaccinate at all than to do it imperfectly, and so bring it into discredit.

6. During the week, 27 patients have attended the dispensary daily, and there have been 3 in-patients.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF PARLIAMENT, 24 & 25 VIC., CAP. 67.

The Council met at Simla on Wednesday, the 28th October 1868.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, presiding.
His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.
The Hon'ble G. N. Taylor.
The Hon'ble H. S. Maine.
The Hon'ble John Strachey.
The Hon'ble Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Colonel H. W. Norman, C.B.
The Hon'ble F. R. Cockerell.
The Hon'ble Sir George Couper, Bart., C.B.

EVIDENCE BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE moved for leave to introduce a Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence. He said it would probably be sufficient to state that the Bill embodied the draft rules of law which the Indian Law Commissioners had recently prepared on the subject of evidence. There was probably no subject on which a codified law was more wanted in India, and the Commissioners had fully stated in the report which had been circulated to Hon'ble Members, the reasons for all the changes which the Bill proposed to introduce. If he got leave to introduce the Bill, he proposed to ask His Excellency the President to suspend the rules for the conduct of business, and, on their suspension, to introduce the Bill with a view to its publication in the Gazette. There was no use in now dilating to any length on the technical subjects comprised in the Bill.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE then asked the President to suspend the Rules for the conduct of Business.

The President declared the Rules suspended.

The Hon'ble Mr. MAINE then introduced the Bill.

GENERAL STAMP BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL moved for leave to introduce a Bill for imposing Stamp Duties on certain instruments. He said that the Stamp Law was, previous to 1860, spread over various Regulations of the Codes of the three Presidencies, each Presidency having its distinct law on the subject. By Act XXXVI of that year, the subject-matter of those Regulations, together with several new provisions in regard to Stamp Duties, taken from the English Statutes, was reduced into one enactment applicable to the whole of India. The want of any systematic arrangement of details which so strongly characterized the existing Stamp Law—for Act X of 1862 was a mere reproduction, with a few unimportant additions of Act XXXVI of 1860—and which created so much difficulty in ascertaining its requirements, was probably due to this attempted fusion of the substance of the Regulations with the provisions of the English law.

As experience of the working of the consolidated Stamp Act was gained, its marked defect in this respect became so generally admitted and reprehended, that the Government of India, with a view to future legislation on the subject, in a letter of the 30th April 1867, addressed to the several Local Governments from the Financial Department, communicated the following remarks and instructions:—

3. "The Stamp Act (X of 1862) and Schedule A of that Act especially are said generally to be defective in this particular, namely that their provisions are so wanting in clearness and proper arrangement, that the public is unable to understand either wholly, or only after much research, what the duties are that, in the execution of documents, the law requires them to pay.

4. "The object, therefore, of the proposed amendment of the Act is, without any material sacrifice of revenue, so to express and re-arrange the Act and its Schedules as that the public may see at a glance what the duties are which the law requires them to pay.

5. "The best way of attaining to this object would seem to be to appoint local Committees in every large town or chief station of a district, and to direct such Committees to consider and report upon every section or article of the Act which seems to them to require amendment."

Accordingly, Committees were appointed in all the principal towns of British India to consider and report on the question of the amendment of the Stamp Law of India, and all officers who had had experience of the working of the law were reqested to express their opinion on the subject.

On two points the general conclusions of the Committees and officers consulted might be said to be unanimous:—

1*st*.—That the Stamp Law must be entirely re-constructed on a simpler and more popular plan, so as to render its provisions intelligible to the community whose ordinary transactions were so materially affected by it.

2*nd*.—That if criminal penalties were to be maintained as a necessary means of protecting the revenue, the power of impounding documents not bearing a proper stamp, which had been vested in Collectors in the Bengal Presidency by Regulation X of 1829, must be revived and conferred on all public officers.

The objections to Act X in regard to the the want of clearness in its provisions had more especial reference to Schedule A. The arrangement of its subject-matter in English alphabetical order, it was urged, was manifestly unsuited to the circumstances of the case; whilst the complicated description of the various instruments liable to Stamp Duty, unaided by any attempt at interpretation, and the circumlocutory expression of the proper stamp to be borne by many of those instruments, were extremely perplexing to the person seeking to ascertain what the law required of him.

When it was considered that the provisions of the law before they could be generally acted on must be translated into several vernacular languages in which the alphabetical indicator became necessarily lost, the chaotic confusion which an arrangement of the contents of the schedule in English alphabetical order must present to the Native mind, might well be conceived. And the difficulty of ascertaining the requirements of the law was greatly enhanced by the circuitous mode of expression of the proper Stamp Duty chargeable on any instrument. As an instance of this. Mr. COCKERELL would take the case of a person wishing to execute an instrument of reconveyance of mortgaged property. After finding, it might be presumed, with some difficulty, the specification of that instrument in the schedule, he learnt that the proper stamp was the same as that for an "Assignment." The same search under difficulties must be gone through to find "Assignment," and on finding it he was informed that if his instrument was "not of the nature specified under the head of Conveyance or Settlement nor specially exempted," but comprised the assignment of "any interest secured by an original deed, instrument or writing on a stamp of value less than Rs. 8," it must bear "the same stamp as the original instrument, and in any other case a stamp of the value of Rs. 8."

A more complex process could hardly be conceived. The person intending to execute the instrument in question must, to ascertain what duty he had to pay, examine no less than four different denominations of instruments specified in the schedule, and if the instrument was in the nature of a conveyance, as, if he held actual possession of the property mortgaged, it certainly would be, he must be left to presume that he had to pay the same duty as would be charged on an instrument of conveyance.

The present Bill aimed at the removal of these anomalies. It had been framed in general accordance with the recommendations of the Committees and officers above referred to. It was a complete reconstruction of the law relating to Stamp Duties. All instruments liable to be stamped were classed according to the amount of duty with which they were chargeable, and, as far as possible, instruments involving similar obligations had been subjected to the same rate of Stamp Duty. The description of instrument which each denomination specified in the schedules was intended to include was explained by a full interpretation clause, and provision was made for the careful translation of the law, under the immediate direction of each Local Government, into the principal vernacular languages of the territories subject to its control.

The most important change in the existing law contemplated by the Bill was in regard to the procedure for the enforcement of penalties.

Under Act X of 1862, the Collector and the Civil Courts were empowered to levy fiscal penalties on instruments not bearing a proper stamp which might be brought before them, and criminal penalties might be adjudged by the Magistrate on prosecution by the Collector. Unless, however, the fact of any instrument having been executed on unstamped or insufficiently stamped paper, transpired in any proceeding before the Collector, no sufficient grounds for prosecuting criminally infringements of the stamp law were obtainable, and consequently, as a matter of fact, such prosecutions were rarely attempted. All public officers, as well as Civil Courts and Collectors, were prohibited by the existing law from receiving in evidence, or otherwise acting on, any documents which might come before them not bearing the proper stamp. When such documents were produced before the Collector or in the Civil Courts, they could be validated by the payment of the penalties above referred to; in all other cases they must be rejected. But the law contained no provision for otherwise vindicating its infringement.

Under all excise laws, the article made liable to the payment of duty was, when such duty was not paid, declared to be contraband and liable to be seized for the enforcement of the penalties attached to evasion of duty, and such course was deemed justifiable as necessary for the protection of the revenue. The Bill provided for the application of this principle to the case of unstamped or insufficiently stamped instruments. It empowered Civil and Criminal Courts to impound such instruments and send them to the Collector for the prosecution of the offenders, where such course might seem to be necessary for the protection of the revenue, and it placed an absolute obligation upon all registering and other public officers to impound and send to the Collector every instrument not bearing a proper stamp which might be brought before them.

The present scale of Stamp Duties on bonds and conveyances had been generally objected to on the ground of the inequality of the taxation resulting from its irregular gradations of increase of duty, for example, a bond for Rs. 300 required a stamp of Rs. 2 only, but a bond for Rs. 305 must bear a stamp of Rs. 4. Instances of this kind were to be found throughout the present scale of duties chargeable on bonds and conveyances. Under it the percentage of Stamp Duty varied from $1\frac{1}{3}$ to $\frac{1}{5}$ in the case of bonds, and from 2 to $\frac{7}{15}$ in the case of conveyances. The revenue also suffered under this system, for the bond for Rs. 305 was divisible into two bonds of Rs. 200 and Rs. 105, and the aggregate duty chargeable under the scale for such instruments was Rs. 2 only. So, again, a bond for Rs. 11,000 was subject to a Stamp Duty of Rs. 60; but by dividing the amount and executing separate bonds for Rs. 10,000 and 1,000 the aggregate duty payable was reduced from Rs. 60 to Rs. 41 and the revenue lost Rs. 19 by the transaction.

The Bill proposed to substitute a scale more in accordance with the English system, but without adopting the English rates, which were unsuited to the circumstances of this country in which the mass of transactions coming under the operation of the stamp law involved small amounts. The scale provided for an uniform percentage of one-half on the maximum amount of each gradation in the case of bonds, and double that rate for conveyances.

The result of this equalization of the Stamp Duty charges was a reduction of the existing rates on bonds below Rs. 10,000 and of those on conveyances for any amount not exceeding Rs. 15,000, and an increase of such rates in all other cases. On the whole it was probable that the revenue would lose more than it would gain by the proposed alteration of the scale of duties chargeable on these instruments; but looking to the degree of security against evasion of stamp duties through ignorance or fraud which the provisions of the Bill were calculated to afford, Mr. COCKERELL confidently anticipated that if the Bill became law, whilst it would certainly in many ways be more advantageous and acceptable to the taxpayer than the law which it superseded, it would also prove a financial success.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL asked the President to suspend the Rules for the Conduct of Business.

The President declared the Rules suspended.

The Hon'ble Mr. COCKERELL then introduced the Bill.

ARTICLES OF WAR.

The Hon'ble Colonel NORMAN asked the President's leave to postpone the Motion, of which he had given notice, that the Bill to consolidate and amend the Articles of War for the government of Her Majesty's Indian Forces be referred to a Select Committee.

Leave was granted.

IMPROVEMENT OF LAND (N. W. PROVINCES) BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY in moving for leave to introduce a Bill to facilitate the improvement of land in the North-Western Provinces, said that he would explain briefly the circumstances which had rendered legislation necessary. The High Court at Agra had decided some time ago that, by the general law of the North-Western Provinces, a tenant, even though he possessed a right of occupancy, was liable to ejectment if he dug a kachcha well or planted trees without his landlord's previous consent. Although the High Court felt that it could come to no other conclusion, it was clear from the terms of its decision that it entertained grave doubts as to the reasonableness of the law which it was administering, and he had recently been able to satisfy himself of the correctness of this opinion, having had the advantage of discussing the question with the learned Chief Justice of the High Court, who was now in Simla. There could be no doubt of the hardship caused by the present state of the law. For, consider what a kachcha well very frequently was in the North-Western Provinces—a mere hole in the ground, a few feet deep, made at the cost of a few rupees, and without which it would be impossible to obtain any crop. Surely it was unreasonable and impolitic that a tenant with a right of occupancy should be liable to ejectment, liable to forfeiture of his property, for a useful and, indeed, indispensable act, which by no means implied or asserted a proprietary right in the land. Similar remarks might be made as to planting trees, and Mr. STRACHEY had recently heard of cases of extreme hardship, where the penalty of ejectment had been incurred by tenants having rights of occupancy, who had re-planted mango groves which had been on the ground from time immemorial, and which had either gone to decay, or been blown down by a storm.

Under these circumstances, the Government of the North-Western Provinces were of opinion that legislation was necessary, and the present Bill was accordingly prepared; and it was thought desirable to take this opportunity of assimilating the law of the North-Western Provinces, as regarded tenants' improvements, to the laws on that subject now in force in Oudh and the Panjáb. There was, however, one distinction. While the provisions as to improvements contained in the Acts which had recently been passed for Oudh and the Panjáb were intended merely for the protection of the tenants, it was

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY then asked the President to suspend the Rules for the Conduct of Business, in order that the Bill might be introduced and published in the Gazette.

The PRESIDENT declared the Rules suspended.

The Hon'ble Mr. STRACHEY then introduced the Bill.

The Council then adjourned to Wednesday, the 4th of November 1868.

LEGISLATIVE.

The following Act of the Governor General of India in Council received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General on the 21st October 1868, and is hereby promulgated for general information:—

ACT No. XXVII OF 1868.

An Act to exempt certain Instruments from the Indian Registration Act, 1866.

WHEREAS it is expedient to exempt expressly from compulsory registration under the Indian Registration Act, 1866, certain documents heretofore or hereafter executed by or in favour of Government; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Scheduled documents exempted from Act XX of 1866.

1. Nothing contained in the said Act shall be deemed to require, or to have at any time required, the registration of any of the documents or maps comprised in the Schedule hereto annexed.

But all such documents and maps shall, for the purposes of sections forty-eight and forty-nine of the same Act, be deemed to have been and to be registered in accordance with its provisions.

Inspection and copies of scheduled documents.

2. Subject to such rules and the previous payment of such fees as the Local Government may from time to time prescribe in this behalf, all documents and maps specified in the first, second, and third clauses of the said schedule shall be open to the inspection of any person applying to inspect the same, and, subject as aforesaid, copies of such documents shall be given to all persons applying for such copies.

Copies of sanads to be filed by Registrar.

3. A copy of every document mentioned in the fourth clause of the said schedule and executed on or after the first day of May 1866, shall, in the case of every such document heretofore executed, as soon as may be after the passing of this Act, and in the case of every such document hereafter executed, as soon as may be after its execution, be sent by the Local Government to the Registrar or to every Registrar within whose district the whole or any part of the immoveable property comprised in such document is situate, and shall be filed by him in his Book 1.

This Act to be read with Act XX of 1866.

4. This Act shall be read with and taken as part of Act No. XX of 1866.

SCHEDULE.

(1). Documents issued, received, or attested by any officer engaged in making a settlement or revision of settlement of land revenue, and which form part of the records of such settlement.

(2). Documents and maps issued, received, or authenticated by any officer engaged on behalf of Government in making or revising the survey of any land, other than waste land, and which form part of the record of such survey.

(3). Documents which, under any law for the time being in force, are filed annually by patwáris or other officers charged with the preparation of village records.

(4). Sanads, inám title-deeds, and other documents purporting to be or to evidence grants or assignments by Government of land or of any interest in land, in reward for special services.

An Act to define and amend the law relating to the tenancy of land in the Panjáb.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend the law relating to certain matters connected with the tenancy of land in the Panjáb; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.—PRELIMINARY.

Short title.
Extent of Act.

1. This Act may be called "The Panjáb Tenancy Act, 1868," and shall extend only to the territories for the time being under the government of the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb.

Saving of decrees and of agreements between landlords and tenants.

2. Nothing contained in this Act shall affect the operation of any decree of Court under which a tenant holds or of any agreement between a landlord and a tenant, when such agreement is in writing or recorded by the proper officer in the record of a regular settlement sanctioned by the Local Government.

All entries in such record in respect of matters comprised in Chapters III, IV, V and VI of this Act shall, when attested by the proper officer, be deemed to be agreements within the meaning of this section.

Interpretation clause.

3. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—

"Land."

"Land" means immoveable property for the time being subject to a settlement, whether regular or summary, of land-revenue;

"Rent."

"Rent" means whatever is payable by an occupant of land on account of the use or occupation thereof;

"Arrear of rent."

Any instalment of rent which is not paid on or before the day when the same becomes due, whether under a written agreement or according to law or local usage, shall be deemed to be, for the purposes of this Act, an arrear of rent;

"Tenant."

"Tenant" means any occupant of land liable to pay rent therefor, but does not include an under-proprietor;

An Act to define and amend the law relating to the tenancy of land in the Panjáb.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to define and amend the law relating to certain matters connected with the tenancy of land in the Panjáb; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.—PRELIMINARY.

Short title. Extent of Act.

1. This Act may be called "The Panjáb Tenancy Act, 1868," and shall extend only to the territories for the time being under the government of the Lieutenant Governor of the Panjáb.

Saving of decrees and of agreements between landlords and tenants.

2. Nothing contained in this Act shall affect the operation of any decree of Court under which a tenant holds or of any agreement between a landlord and a tenant, when such agreement is in writing or recorded by the proper officer in the record of a regular settlement sanctioned by the Local Government.

All entries in such record in respect of matters comprised in Chapters III, IV, V and VI of this Act shall, when attested by the proper officer, be deemed to be agreements within the meaning of this section.

Interpretation clause.

3. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—

"Land."

"Land" means immoveable property for the time being subject to a settlement, whether regular or summary, of land-revenue;

"Rent."

"Rent" means whatever is payable by an occupant of land on account of the use or occupation thereof;

"Arrear of rent."

Any instalment of rent which is not paid on or before the day when the same becomes due, whether under a written agreement or according to law or local usage, shall be deemed to be, for the purposes of this Act, an arrear of rent;

"Tenant."

"Tenant" means any occupant of land liable to pay rent therefor, but does not include an under-proprietor;

"Landlord."

"Landlord" means any person entitled to receive rent payable by a tenant.

Grand-father," uncle," and "grand-uncle."

"Grand-father" includes the father of an adoptive father, "uncle" the brother of an adoptive father, and "grand-uncle" the adoptive father of an uncle;

"Representative." "Representative" means an heir or any other person taking by operation of law or by will a beneficial interest in the property of a deceased person.

Repeal of Book Circular No. 33 of 1860.

4. The Book Circular of the Financial Commissioner of the Panjáb, No. 33 of 1860, is hereby repealed.

CHAPTER II.—Of Rights of Occupancy.

Tenants having right of occupancy.

5. Every tenant who—

(1) has heretofore paid no rent and rendered no service, in respect of the land occupied by him, to the proprietor thereof for the time being, beyond the amount of land-revenue and village-cesses for the time being chargeable thereon, and whose father and grandfather, uncle and grand-uncle occupying the same land, have paid no rent and rendered no service in respect thereof to such proprietor, beyond the amount aforesaid.

(2) or who has involuntarily parted or shall involuntarily part with proprietary rights in any land otherwise than by forfeiture to Government; and who has continuously occupied or shall continuously occupy such land or any part thereof from the time of such parting;

(3) or who is at the date of passing this Act the representative of a person who settled as a cultivator in the village in which the land occupied by such tenant is situate along with the founders of the village;

(4) or who is or has been jágírdár of the village or any part of the village in which the land occupied by him as tenant is situate, and who has continuously occupied such land for not less than twenty years—shall be deemed to have a right of occupancy in the land so occupied.

Presumption arising from entry in settlement record.

6. Every tenant whose name appears in the records of a regular or revised settlement heretofore sanctioned by the Local Government, as having a right of occupancy in land which he or the person from whom he has immediately inherited has continuously occupied from the entry of his name or the name of such person (as the case may be) in such settlement, shall be presumed to have a right of occupancy in the land so occupied,

Rebuttal of presumption.

unless the landlord shall in a regular suit prove—

(1) that within the thirty years immediately before the institution of such suit other tenants of the same class in the same or in adjacent villages have ordinarily been ejected from their holdings at the will of the landlord; or

(2) that the tenant has voluntarily admitted before any officer employed in making or revising a regular settlement of land revenue or before any officer authorized to attest the entries in the record of such settlement, that he is a tenant not having a right of occupancy, and that such admission has been recorded at the time by the officer so employed or authorized.

Right of occupancy in land taken in exchange.

7. If the tenant has voluntarily exchanged the land, or any portion of the land, formerly occupied by him for other land belonging to the same landlord, the land taken in exchange shall, for the purposes of this Act, be held to be subject to the same right of occupancy as the land given in exchange would have been subject to if the exchange had not taken place.

Suits to establish rights of occupancy on other grounds.

8. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to preclude any person claiming a right of occupancy on any ground other than the grounds hereinbefore specified from suing to establish such right.

Non-acquisition of right of occupancy by lapse of time.

9. No tenant shall be deemed to acquire a right of occupancy by mere lapse of time.

And no right of occupancy in the common lands belonging to a pattídárí village-community shall be acquired under this Chapter.

CHAPTER III.—Of Rent.

1.—Enhancement.

Decree for enhancement of rent.

10. No tenant shall, in the absence of an agreement or decree of Court to the contrary effect, be held liable, in a suit for arrears of rent in respect of any land, to pay rent exceeding in amount the rent payable by him in respect of such land for the last preceding agricultural year, unless a decree for the enhancement of the rent has been made as hereinafter provided.

The said Lieutenant Governor shall have power, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, to declare for all or any of the Districts under his government the day on which the agricultural year shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to commence.

Grounds of enhancement.

11. The Court may decree that the rent previously payable by any tenant having a right of occupancy may be enhanced on any of the following grounds:—

1st Ground.—That the quantity of land held by him as tenant exceeds the quantity for which he has previously been liable to pay rent.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall decree rent for the land in excess at the same rate as that payable in respect of the land of a similar description and with similar advantages held by him of the same landlord.

2nd Ground.—That the rate of rent paid by him is below the rate of rent usually paid in the same or adjoining villages by the same class of tenants having a right of occupancy for land of a similar description and with similar advantages.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall enhance his rent to the amount claimed by the plaintiff not exceeding such rate.

3rd Ground.—That the rate of rent paid by him is,

if he belong to the class described in clause 1 of section five, more than fifty per centum,

if he belong to any of the classes specified in clause 2, 3 or 4 of section five, more than thirty per centum, and if he belong to the class specified in section six, more than fifteen per centum, below the rate of rent usually paid in the neighbourhood by tenants of the same class not having a right of occupancy for land of a similar description and with similar advantages.

Rule.—In this case the Court shall enhance his rent to the amount claimed by the plaintiff not exceeding such rate, less fifty per centum, thirty per centum or fifteen per centum, as the case may be.

Enhancement when tenant pays revenue or cesses.

12. If the revenue or any of the village-cesses is payable by the defendant, the rate to which his rent may be enhanced shall be reduced by the amount so payable.

Suit for re-enhancement.

13. After a decree has been passed under section ten, no suit shall lie against the defendant for re-enhancement of his rent until the expiration of five years from the date of such decree, unless in the mean time there has taken place a general revision of regular settlement, under which the revenue payable for the land comprised in the decree has been increased.

2.—Abatement.

Grounds of right to abatement.

14. Every tenant having a right of occupancy shall be entitled to claim abatement of the rent previously paid by him on either of the following grounds, and on no others:—

(1) that the area of the land in his occupation has been diminished by diluvion or otherwise, or proved to be less than the quantity for which rent has been previously paid by him; or

(2) that the productive powers of such land have been decreased by any cause beyond his control.

3.—Remission.

When Court may allow remission from rent.

15. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, it shall be lawful for the Court, in making a decree for an arrear of rent, if the area of the land in the tenant's occupation has been diminished by diluvion or otherwise, or if the produce of such land has been diminished by drought or hail, or other calamity beyond his control, to such an extent that the full amount of rent payable by him cannot, in the opinion of the Court, be equitably decreed,

to allow such remission from the rent payable by him as may appear equitable:

Provided that if the tenant hold a lease for an unexpired term of not less than five years, or have a right of occupancy, in a revenue-paying estate, no such remission shall be allowed to him, unless a remission of revenue has been allowed on the same ground and by competent authority in respect of the same estate.

4.—Rent in Kind.

Commutation of rent in kind.

16. No commutation of rent in kind into rent in money, and no commutation of rent in money into rent in kind, shall take place without the consent of both the landlord and the tenant.

Division and appraisement of produce taken for rent.

17. Whenever rent is taken by division of the produce in kind, or by estimate or appraisement of the standing crop, or other procedure of a similar nature, requiring the presence of the person entitled to the rent and of the cultivator, either personally or by their recognized agents, if either party neglects to be present at the proper period, or if a dispute arises between the parties regarding such division, estimate or appraisement, either party may present an application to the Court, on a paper bearing a stamp of eight annas, requesting that a proper person be deputed to make the division, estimate or appraisement.

Procedure in case of dispute.

18. On receiving such application and such sum, to be paid in the first instance by the applicant, as the Court thinks sufficient to defray the costs of serving the notice and making the award next hereinafter mentioned, the Court shall issue a written notice to the other party requiring him to attend on the date and at the place specified in the notice, and shall depute a proper person to make the division, estimate or appraisement and to direct by whom the costs of each party are to be paid.

The award of such person in respect of the said division, estimate or appraisement and costs shall be final, unless within three months from the date thereof either party institutes a suit to set it aside.

CHAPTER IV.—Of Ejectment.

Ejectment of tenant with right of occupancy.

19. No tenant having a right of occupancy in any land shall be ejected therefrom otherwise than in execution of a decree.

Such decree shall not be made, unless

(1) at the date of the decree, a decree against such tenant for an arrear of rent in respect of such land has remained unsatisfied for fifteen days or upwards; or

(2) the landlord tenders to the tenant, in addition to any compensation to which he may be entitled under sections twenty-seven and thirty-seven (but subject to deduction in respect of the arrears of rent, if any, payable by him), such compensation as the Court thinks fit, not less than fifteen, and not more than thirty, times the amount of the net annual profits receivable by the tenant in respect of such land on an average of the three years next before the date of the tender.

Nothing in the last preceding clause shall be deemed to apply to a tenant belonging to any of the classes specified in section five, or to a tenant when he, or the person from whom he has inherited, has continuously occupied such land for thirty years or upwards.

Ejectment of tenant without right of occupancy.

20. A tenant not having a right of occupancy may be ejected—

first, if a decree has been obtained against him for arrears of rent or for ejectment; or second, when he is not holding under an unexpired lease, or an agreement, or a decree of Court, by notice given by the landlord in manner hereinafter mentioned.

Time of ejectment.

21. Notwithstanding anything herein contained, no tenant shall be ejected from the land in his occupation, except between the fifteenth day of April and the fifteenth day of June, unless while the rent in respect of such land is in arrear, he has failed to cultivate the land in accordance with the terms on which he holds it.

Notice of Ejectment.

Notice of ejectment.

22. The notice of ejectment shall be written in the vernacular language of the district: it shall specify the lands from which the tenant is to be ejected; and it shall inform him that, if he means to dispute the ejectment, he must institute a suit for that purpose on or before the fifteenth day of May next after the service of the notice, or quit the land on or before that date.

The said Lieutenant Governor shall determine what, for the purposes of this section, shall be deemed to be the vernacular language of each District in the territories under his government.

Service of notice.

23. On the landlord's application to the Tahsíldár or other officer authorized to serve such notices, the notice shall be served by him on or before the fifteenth day of April, and the landlord shall pay the costs of service.

The notice shall, if practicable, be served personally on the tenant.

But if he cannot be found, service may be made by affixing the notice at his usual place of residence, or, if he does not reside in the district wherein the land is situate, at some conspicuous place in the village wherein the land is situate.

Power to alter dates for suing to dispute, and for serving notice of, ejectment.

24. The said Lieutenant Governor shall have power, from time to time, by notification published in the official Gazette not less than six months before such notification is to come into force, to fix, for the purposes of sections twenty-two and twenty-three, in all or any of the Districts under his government, any two days other than the days fixed in the same sections:

Provided that between the days so fixed by notification, there shall be an interval of at least one month.

Cessation of tenancy on failure to contest notice.

25. If the tenant on whom such notice of ejectment has been served fails to institute, on or before the fifteenth day of May next after the service, or, in case the said Lieutenant Governor fixes for the purpose of section twenty-two any day other than the said fifteenth day of May, then on or before the day so fixed, a suit to contest his liability to be ejected, his tenancy of the land in respect of which the notice has been served shall be held to cease on that day.

Assistance to eject.

When assistance to eject may be given by Court.

26. If no such suit be brought, or if such suit be brought and dismissed, and the landlord require the assistance of the Court to eject any person whose tenancy is alleged to have ceased under the provisions of section twenty-two, he may apply for such assistance; and if the Court be satisfied that notice of ejectment was duly served on such person, it shall, subject to the provisions of section nineteen, give such assistance accordingly.

Nothing done by the Court under this section shall affect the right of any tenant to institute a suit against his landlord on account of illegal ejectment, and to recover compensation for the same.

Growing Crops.

Compensation to ejected tenant for growing crops.

27. Any tenant ejected in accordance with the provisions of this Act, shall be entitled to receive from the landlord the value of any growing crops or other ungathered products of the earth belonging to such tenant and being on the land at the time of the ejectment:

Provided that if the land has been sown or planted by the tenant after the service on him of the notice mentioned in section twenty, he shall not be so entitled, unless, after such service, the landlord has expressly authorized him to continue to occupy the land.

CHAPTER V.—Of Relinquishment, Leases and Under-leases, Alienation and Succession.

1.—Relinquishment.

Relinquishment of land by tenant.

28. Every tenant shall be liable to pay the rent payable in respect of the land in his occupation for the ensuing agricultural year, unless, on or before the first day of January next before the commencement of that year, he gives notice to the landlord of his intention to relinquish such land before the commencement of such year, and relinquishes it accordingly, or unless the land has been let to any other person by the landlord.

Power to fix commencement of agricultural year for purposes of section 28.

29. The said Lieutenant Governor shall have power, from time to time, by notification in the official Gazette, to declare, for all or any of the Districts under his government, the day on which the agricultural year shall, for the purposes of section twenty-eight be deemed to commence, and, in lieu of the said first day of January, to substitute, for the purposes of section twenty-eight, in all or any of the same Districts, such day as he thinks fit.

Discharge of tenant.

30. If the tenant relinquishes the land according to his said notice, he shall be discharged from all liability to pay the rent which would otherwise have accrued due in respect of such land after the date of the relinquishment.

Refusal to receive notice.

31. If the landlord or his recognized agent refuse to receive such notice, he tenant may apply to the tahsíldár or proper officer, and written notice shall thereupon be served by him on such landlord or agent, and the tenant shall pay the costs of service.

The notice shall, if practicable, be served personally on the landlord or agent.

But if he cannot be found, service may be made by affixing the notice at his usual place of residence, or, if he does not reside in the district wherein the land is situate, at some conspicuous place in the village wherein the land is situate.

2.—Leases and Under-leases.

Right to let or under-let.

32. Every tenant having a right of occupancy may let or under-let the land in his occupation or any part thereof:

Saving of agreements not to let or sub-let.

Provided that nothing in the former part of this section shall be deemed to affect any agreement on the part of a lessee that he will not, or will not without the previous consent of the lessor or his representative, under-let or part with the possession of the said land or any portion thereof.

Liability of lessee and under-lessee.

33. Every person to whom land is let or under-let under section thirty-two shall in respect of such land, and so far as regards the landlord and his representative, be subject to all the liabilities under this Act to which the lessor or under-lessor would have been subject in respect of such land, and so far as regards such landlord and his representative, in case the lease or under-lease had not been made.

3.—Alienation.

Right of tenant to alienate.

34. Any tenant having a right of occupancy claimable in accordance with the terms of any of the clauses of section five, may alienate the land in his occupation, or any part thereof:

Landlord's right of pre-emption.

Provided that in every such case the land or part aforesaid shall be offered for sale in the first instance to the landlord at the market-value, and shall not be alienated to any other person unless the landlord shall, for the space of one month, refuse or neglect to complete the purchase.

Every other tenant may alienate the land in his occupation, or any part thereof, with his landlord's previous consent, but not otherwise.

Rights and liabilities of tenant's alienee.

35. Every person other than the landlord, to whom land is alienated under section thirty-four, shall, in respect of such land, have the same rights and be subject to the same liabilities as the tenant making the alienation.

Succession to right of occupancy.

36. When a tenant having a right of occupancy in any land dies his right shall devolve on his male lineal descendants (if any), and, failing such descendants, the right shall go to his male collateral relatives: provided that the common ancestor of the deceased and his said relatives shall have occupied such land.

As among descendants and collateral relatives claiming under this section, such right shall devolve and go as if it were land left by the deceased in the village in which such land is situate.

CHAPTER VI.—OF COMPENSATION FOR TENANTS' IMPROVEMENTS.

Tenant's right to compensation for improvements.

37. If any tenant, or, in the case of a tenant with a right of occupancy, the person from whom he has inherited, makes any such improvements on the land in his occupation as are hereinafter mentioned, the rent payable by him or his representative in respect of such land shall not be enhanced, nor shall he or his representative be ejected from the same land, unless and until he or his representative, as the case may be, has received compensation for the money or labour, or both, expended in making such improvements by him, or the person from whom he has inherited, or whom he represents, within thirty years next before the date of such enhancement or ejectment.

"Improvements" defined.

38. The word "improvements," as used in section thirty-seven, means works by which the annual letting-value of the land has been, and at the time of demanding compensation, continues to be, increased, and shall comprise—

1st, the construction of works for the storage of water, for the supply of water for agricultural purposes, for drainage, and for protection against floods; the construction of wells, the reclaiming and clearing of waste lands and other works of a like nature;

2nd, the renewal or reconstruction of any of the foregoing works, or such alterations therein, or additions thereto, as are not required for maintaining the same, and which increase durably their value.

Compensation how made.

39. Such compensation may, at the option of the landlord or his representative, be made—

(1) by payment in money;

(2) by the grant of a beneficial lease of the land by the landlord or his representative to the tenant or his representative; or

(3) partly by payment in money, and partly by the grant of such lease as aforesaid.

Provision for difference as to amount or value of compensation.

40. In case of difference as to the amount or value of the compensation tendered, either party may present an application to the Court on a paper bearing a stamp of eight annas, stating the matter in dispute, and requesting a determination thereof.

Notice of such application shall be served on the other party by the proper officer, and the applicant shall pay the costs of service.

On receiving such application, the Court shall, after taking such evidence as the parties or either of them may adduce, and after making such further enquiry (if any) as it may deem necessary, shall determine (as the case may be) the amount of the payment, or the terms of the lease, or both:

Provided that, in determining such amount or value, the Court shall take into account any assistance given by the landlord, either directly by money, material or labour at the time of making such improvements, or indirectly by subsequently allowing the tenant to hold at a rate of rent more favourable than the rate at which he otherwise would have held.

Tender of lease for twenty years to bar right to claim compensation.

41. If in any case a landlord tenders to a tenant a lease of the land in his occupation, for a term of not less than twenty years from the date of the tender, at the annual rent then paid by the tenant, or at such other annual rent as may be agreed upon, such tender, if accepted by the tenant, shall bar any claim by him or his representative in respect of improvements previously made on such land by the tenant or the person from whom he has inherited.

CHAPTER VII.—Of Procedure.

Civil Courts to hear cases under certain sections.

42. Cases cognizable under sections five, six, eleven, fourteen, nineteen, twenty and twenty-five, shall, unless otherwise provided for by any law for the time being in force, and subject to the provisions of section twenty-one of Act No. XIX of 1865 (to define the jurisdiction of the Courts of judicature of the Pánjáb and its dependencies), be heard in the Civil Courts other than the Courts of Small Causes, unless when such Courts of Small Causes shall have been specially empowered by the Local Government, under Act No. XI of 1865, section six, to hear such cases.

Applications under certain sections to be proceedings on Revenue side.

Applications under sections seventeen, twenty-three, twenty-six, and thirty-one shall be deemed to be proceedings on the Revenue side: they shall be subject to the rules of procedure for the time being in force in such cases; and all orders on such applications shall be appealable to the Financial Commissioner of the Panjáb.

Stamp on certain plaints.

43. The plaint in every suit under sections five, six, eleven, fourteen and twenty-five, shall bear a stamp of eight annas.

Saving of procedure for recovery of rent.

44. The procedure now in force in the Panjáb for the recovery of rent shall, except in so far as it is inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, continue to be in force.

Confirmation of proceedings of settlement officers.

45. All proceedings of officers of Government in making or revising, prior to the passing of this Act, settlements of land-revenue shall, so far as such proceedings are consistent with the provisions of this Act, and subject to appeal and revision when an appeal or a revision is provided, be deemed to have been taken in accordance with law.

Whitley Stokes,
Asst. Secy. to the Govt. of India,
Home Dept. (Legislative).

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 28th October 1868:—

No. 26 of 1868.

A Bill to define and amend the Law of Evidence.

Preamble.

Whereas it is expedient to define and amend the Law of Evidence; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Meaning of Words.

1. In the following rules, the word Court shall be taken to comprise all Courts of Justice, civil or criminal, and all persons having by law or consent of parties authority to take evidence; and the word Cause shall be taken to comprise all judicial proceedings, civil or criminal.

Admissibility.

2. Whenever any evidence is said to be admissible, it is not meant that it is to be regarded as conclusive, but only that the weight, if any, which the deciding authority may consider due, shall be allowed to it.

Anything which has a bearing upon any question in issue in a cause, the determination of which question is material to the decision of the cause, is admissible, unless it is excluded by the rules contained in this Act.

3. No statement by a witness of anything, or founded upon anything spoken, written, or otherwise intimated by another person, and no statement contained in any document is admissible in evidence, except in the cases specified in the rules hereinafter contained.

Illustrations.

(a.)—B is tried for robbing C. A gives evidence that D told him that he saw B rob C. The evidence is inadmissible.

(b)—B is tried for robbing C. A gives evidence that D, a deaf and dumb person, intimated to him by signs that he saw B rob C. The evidence is inadmissible.

(c.)—A gives evidence that B robbed C. Being asked how he knows it, he says that he knows it only because E told him so. The evidence which has been admitted must be struck out.

(d.)—A says that B was alive on the 1st January 1860. It appears that A does not speak to this fact of his own knowledge, but that he learnt it from a letter written to him by C, or from a newspaper, or from a printed book, or a picture. In each of these cases, A's statement is not admissible as evidence that B was alive on that day.

(e.)—A says that B was alive on the 1st January 1860. Being asked how he knows this, he produces a letter dated that day from B, whose hand-writing he verifies. The letter is admissible as evidence that B was alive on that day.

4. Such evidence is admissible,—

(1.)—Where the fact that a thing was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated is a question in issue.

Illustration.

A says that he has been told by B that he saw C pick D's pocket. This is admissible in an action against B for slandering C.

(2.)—Where the fact that a person by or to whom the thing was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated, was acquainted with such thing is a question in issue.

Illustration.

A writes to B "I have just heard that C has failed." The letter is received by B The letter is not admissible as evidence that C had failed; but when it is proved that C had then failed, the letter is admissible as evidence that the failure was known to A at the place and time at which the letter was written, and also that B was apprised of it.

(3.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated tends to explain any act or conduct which is a question in issue.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A says on a trial of C for robbing D's house, that he heard B say to C "D's house has been robbed," and that thereupon C fled. This evidence is admissible.

(b.)—On a trial of B for robbing C's house, it is proved that B fled immediately after the robbery. A witness is produced who says that he heard A tell B before B fled, that a warrant had been issued for his arrest under a decree of a civil court. This evidence is admissible.

(c.)—A is on his trial for shooting at B with intent to kill him. It is alleged on A's behalf that the shooting was accidental. Evidence of what A said at the time is admissible as evidence, either for A or against him.

(d.)—A sues B for compensation for maliciously causing him to be apprehended on a charge of theft. Evidence that a theft had been committed in B's house, and that C told B that he saw A running away immediately after, is admissible.

(e.)—A says that he has heard B say to C "Pay me the 1,000 rupees which you owe me." This is no evidence that C owed B 1,000 rupees, but it is evidence that B claimed 1,000 rupees, and it is admissible in order to introduce evidence of what C said or did with respect to the claim.

(f.)—A is charged with sedition, and is proved to have combined with B for seditious purposes. Evidence of words spoken by B, while taking part in a riot in furtherance of those purposes, is admissible against A.

(4.)—Where the thing was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated by a party to the suit, or some one whom he represents in interest, and it is sought to be used against him.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A brings a suit against B to establish a right of way across B's field. Evidence that C, from whom B derives his title to the land, had, while owner, admitted A's right of way, is admissible.

(b.)—A writes to B "By the direction of C, I request you will ship for him 100 bales of cotton." The letter is evidence against A that he had received such direction from C but is not evidence against C that he had given the direction.

(c.)—In a deed to which A was not a party, but which was made between B and C, strangers to A, it is stated that A had become insolvent. This deed is as against B or C admissible in evidence to show that A had become insolvent, but it is not admissible against A for that purpose.

(5.)—In the cases provided for by sections 368, 369, 370 and 371 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(6.)—Where the evidence tendered consists in a statement which was received in evidence in a former judicial proceeding relating to the same subject and between the same parties, or those whom they represent in interest, and where the person who made such statement has since died, or become incapable of giving evidence, or where his presence cannot be procured: provided that if such person were present, his evidence would be admissible.

(7.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated in the ordinary course of business by a person who has died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A, the shipping agent of the firm of B and Co., states in a letter to B and Co. that he has just seen a certain ship of theirs sail from the port of Calcutta. The letter is admissible as evidence of the sailing of the ship.

(b.)—A, an attorney, prepares the draft of an intended deed to which B was to be a party, and indorses upon it a memorandum that a copy had been sent to another attorney on a certain day. The draft contains a statement that B was in insolvent circumstances. The draft and indorsement are admissible as evidence to show that such a copy was sent to the other attorney, but are not admissible as evidence to show that B had become insolvent.

(c.)—A, a commercial traveller employed by the firm of B and Co. to obtain orders and information in the cotton trade only, writes to B and Co. that the firm of C and Co. have ordered of him as such traveller a certain quantity of cotton, and in the same letter he mentions the state of the silk market. A's letter is admissible as evidence of the order given to him, but not of the state of the silk market.

(8.)—Where the thing intimated consists in entries in books kept in the ordinary course of business, or consists in written acknowledgments of the receipt of money, goods, securities, or property of any kind, or in any document used in commerce.

Illustrations.

(a.)—Entries are made by a clerk of a firm in the books of the firm to the effect that the firm has received a consignment of cotton from A, and has purchased 50 chests of indigo from B. These are admissible in evidence against all the partners in the firm.

(b.)—A, one of two partners, makes an entry in the partnership books that he had lent his partner B Rupees 1,000. The entry is not admissible in evidence against B that A had lent him the Rupees 1,000.

(c.)—A clerk whose business it is to make entries in the books of a firm of all monies paid by him, makes an entry in the books that he had paid away Rupees 1,000 for the firm. This entry is admissible in evidence that he had so paid away the money.

(d.)—The firm of A and Co. keep a book in which the despatch and receipt of letters by the firm is regularly noted. An entry in this book of the despatch of a letter on the 1st January 1860 to the firm of B and Co. is admissible in evidence that a letter was despatched on that day by A and Co. to B and Co.

(e.)—The letters written by the firm of A and Co. are, according to the ordinary course of business, copied into a book, and afterwards despatched. A and Co. in order to show that a letter in stated terms was despatched by them on a certain day to B and Co., tender in evidence an entry in their letter-book purporting to be a copy of a letter addressed by them on that day to B and Co., and an entry of the fact that such letter was despatched. The entries are admissible.

(f.)—A guarantees the payment by C of a sum of money due from him to B. A pays the amount to B, and sues C for re-payment. A tenders in evidence a receipt given to himself by B for the amount due. The receipt is admissible in evidence.

(g.)—A sues B for the proceeds of a cargo of cotton consigned by A to B, and sold through a broker. The account sales rendered by the broker are admissible in evidence.

(h.)—A, a wharfinger, gives to B an acknowledgment that 100 tons of copper have been deposited at A's wharf. This acknowledgment is admissible in evidence of the fact that the deposit has been made.

(i.)—A effects a policy on his ship against sea-risks. The ship goes to sea and sustains injury. A institutes a suit to recover damages from the underwriters. The log-book of the ship is admissible in evidence.

(9.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated relates to the usages or tenets of any body of men, the constitution or government of any religious or charitable foundation, or the meaning of any technical or conventional words or terms, or of any words or terms used in particular districts, or to any matter of public or general interest, and was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A, in order to show the religious tenets of a certain sect, tenders in evidence a manuscript treatise, proved to have been written by a deceased member of the sect. The treatise is admissible.

(b.)—It is a disputed fact in a suit whether a certain spot is or is not a public landing-place. Statements made on the subject by A and B, now deceased, who resided in the neighbourhood, are admissible in evidence.

(10.)—Where the thing spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated has reference to the relationship of one person to another, and was spoken, written, stated, or otherwise intimated by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured: provided that such person was a member of the family, or had otherwise special means of knowledge.

Illustrations.

(a.)—It is a disputed fact in the suit whether A is the son of B. A statement made on the subject by C, who was a nurse in B's family about the time of A's birth, is admissible in evidence.

(b.)—A alleging that he is the son of B, deceased, produces the following documents in which he is mentioned as the son of B:—

1. An entry made by B in a memorandum book stating A's birth;
2. Letters which passed between two of B's brothers, since deceased;
3. A deed executed by B.

A also produces witnesses who state that B told them that A was his son.

The contents of the documents and the testimony of the witnesses are admissible in evidence.

(11.)—Where the thing intimated is a fact of a public nature and appears by a recital contained in any Act of the Governor General of India made before or after the passing of this Act, or is notified by any official communication of the Government appearing in the Gazette of India, or in any paper purporting to be the Government Gazette of any Presidency or Lieutenant Governorship of British India, or of any colony or possession of the British Crown.

(12.)—Where the thing intimated is that there has been a public meeting or public proceeding, and such intimation is contained in a report thereof published in any newspaper or journal.

Explanation.—Such report is not admissible in evidence of any fact reported to have occurred, or of any statement reported to have been made at the meeting or proceeding.

Evidence of Law of Foreign Country.

(13.)—Where the thing intimated purports to be the law of a foreign country, and appears to be contained in books or documents purporting to be printed or published under the authority of the Government of that country, or in reports of decisions of the Courts of such country.

Maps.

5. Maps made under the authority of Government shall be admissible as evidence.

"Res Judicata."

6. A grant of probate or of administration unrevoked shall have effect as provided by the Indian Succession Act, section 242.

7. A decree declaring a marriage void is proof that the parties never were husband and wife. A decree declaring a marriage dissolved is proof that the parties have ceased to be husband and wife, if they ever were such.

8. A decree adjudging a ship to the captors as a prize of war is proof that the ship has become the property of the captors.

9. The judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction upon a matter directly in issue is admissible as evidence between the same parties, and those who represent them in interest upon the same matter directly in issue in another cause; but not between any other parties, except as provided for in the next following section of this Act.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A sues B for a horse, alleging that it was stolen from himself, and that B bought it, knowing it to be stolen. Judgment is given in B's favor. B afterwards loses the horse. A finds it, and B sues A for it. A in defence makes the same allegations as in the former suit. The judgment pronounced in the former suit is admissible as evidence in B's favor.

(b.)—A sues B for rent in the Court of the Collector, which has cognizance of such suits. B sets up in defence a mortgage under which he is entitled to retain the rent in satisfaction of the interest of his mortgage. A disputes the genuineness of the mortgage, but the Court pronounces it genuine, and dismisses A's suit. Afterwards B sues A in the District Court to recover the amount due to him upon the mortgage. A disputes the genuineness of the mortgage. The judgment of the Collector is admissible in evidence.

10. A decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction is admissible as evidence that such a judgment pronounced between the parties, but is not as against any person other than the parties thereto and those who represent them in interest evidence of any other fact thereby appearing.

Illustrations.

(a.)—A sues B for compensation for injury sustained through the negligence of C, who is B's agent. A obtains judgment. In a suit brought by B against C for compensation for loss sustained by B through C's negligence, the judgment is admissible as evidence of the amount which A has been adjudged to pay, but not as evidence of B's negligence.

(b.)—A sues B for compensation, because B yielded up to C certain lands which B held as guardian of A, who was then a minor. A decree passed in a prior suit, whereby B was directed to yield up possession to C as owner, is admissible in evidence.

(c.)—A is tried on the charge of having forged a deed of gift from B. He is acquitted. Afterwards C, alleging the deed of gift to be a forgery, institutes a suit against A for certain lands, of which A has obtained possession under it. The record of A's acquittal is not admissible in evidence.

(d.)—A, one of three Hindú brothers, undivided in estate, dies, and his brothers B and C alleging that they are his heirs, sell to D a portion of the land which they possessed jointly with A.

E, claiming as the adopted son and heir of A, sues D for A's share of the land sold to D, and obtains a decree in his favor. He afterwards claiming as such adopted son of A, sues B and C for A's share of the land which remains in their possession. The decree in the former suit is not admissible in evidence.

(e.)—A, alleging that he is the only brother and the heir of B, deceased, sues C for possession of B's land. The Court declares A's title established, and decrees that C shall yield up the land to him.

Afterwards D claims to be the son and heir of B, and sues A for possession of the lands. The decree in the former suit is admissible in evidence that A had obtained such a decree, but is not admissible as evidence that he was entitled to the land as the only brother and heir of B.

(f.)—Two ships come into collision, whereby A, a passenger in one of them, is maimed, and B's goods are destroyed. A obtains a decree for compensation from the owners of the other ship on the ground that the injuries were sustained by him through the negligence of their captain. B sues the owners of the same ship for compensation for the loss of his goods. The judgment is not admissible in B's suit as evidence of the captain's negligence.

(g.)—A sues B for maintenance of C, a minor, whom A alleges to be B's son. B denies that C is his son. The Court decides that C is B's son, and decrees payment by B of A's claims.

B dies. C, alleging that he is B's son, sues the executor of D for a legacy of 10,000 rupees; D having by his will bequeathed that sum to every child of B. The judgment is not admissible in evidence that C is not a son of B.

Proof of Writings which constitute primary evidence.

11. A writing which is not required by law to be attested, but which is alleged to have been signed by a specified person, or to have been written wholly or in part by a specified person, shall not, except in the cases provided for by sections 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21 of this Act, be received as evidence, unless the signature attached thereto

r so much of the same writing as it is sought to erify, be proved to be in the hand-writing of the erson by whom it is alleged to have been written or signed.

12. A written instrument which is required y law to be attested, shall not (except in the ases provided for by s. 20 of this Act) be eceived as evidence, unless the following rules are omplied with :—

(1.)—The execution of such instrument shall e proved by one attesting witness at the least f there be an attesting witness alive, and subject o the process of the Court by which the cause is ried, and capable of bearing testimony.

(2.)—If no attesting witness is alive and subject o such process as aforesaid, and capable of bearing estimony, it shall be proved that the attestaion of one attesting witnees at the least is in his and-writing, and evidence must be adduced to how that the person who executed the instrument was the same person who is alleged to have lone so.

13. In order to ascertain whether a signaure, writing, or seal is genuine, any signature, vriting, or seal, which has been admitted or roved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, may be compared with the disputed one.

14. Where a written instrument purports or is roved to be thirty years old, and is produced rom the proper custody, it shall be admissible n evidence without proof of its execution or ttestation.

Proof of the Contents of Documents by Secondary Evidence.

15. Evidence of the contents or purport of any written or printed document, or of letters, igures, or other marks not produced to the Court, hall not be admissible, except as provided by the ules next following :—

(1.)—A copy of or extract from any proclamaion, order, or regulation, issued by Her Majesty or by the Privy Council or any department of Her Majesty's Government shall be admissible in evidence: Provided that such copy or extract is contained in the London Gazette or in such other Gazette or paper as mentioned in section four, clause (11) of this Act: Or provided it purports to be printed by the Government printer, or to be printed under the authority of the Legislature of any British colony or possession, or to be certified to be true by the proper officer.

(2.)—A copy of a record of any court, or of an entry in any public book or register, which is proved to be a correct copy, or which purports to be under the seal of such Court, or to be certified by the proper officer, shall be admissible as evidence of the existence and the contents of any such record or entry.

(3.)—Evidence shall be admissible of inscriptions or marks which are proved to have been destroyed or lost, or which cannot be produced by reason of their being engraved on or affixed to trees, buildings, or other things of an immoveable character.

(4.)—Evidence of the contents of a written or printed document shall be admissible when it has been proved that the document has been destroyed or lost, or when the person in whose custody it is, is not subject to the process of the Court by which the cause is tried, or is not legally bound to produce the document, or refuses, after due notice, to produce it, or when its absence is otherwise satisfactorily accounted for.

Evidence of Terms of Contract.

16. Where a contract or a grant or other disposition of property is in writing, no evidence of the terms of such contract, grant, or disposition shall be received, except the writing itself, or such evidence of its contents as may be admissible under the provisions of the last preceding section.

Explanation.—The statement of a fact in any such document does not preclude the admission of oral evidence relating to the same fact; and where a suit is instituted for the purpose of setting aside or varying a document on the ground of a mistake in the writing thereof, evidence may be received for the purpose of proving such mistake.

Papers of which proof is not required.

17. No proof shall be required of the genuineness of any paper purporting to be the London Gazette or the Gazette of India or the Government Gazette of any Presidency or Lieutenant Governorship of British India, or of any colony or possession of the British Crown, nor of any paper purporting to be a newspaper or journal, or a copy of a private Act of Parliament printed by the Queen's printer.

18. No proof shall be required of the genuineness of any paper purporting to be a certificate, certified copy or other document which is by law made evidence of any particular fact: Provided that such paper is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by the law in that behalf.

19. No proof shall be required of the official position of any person certifying to the truth of any such paper as is mentioned in the last preceding rule.

20. Any paper purporting to be a power of attorney, and to have been executed before and authenticated by a notary public or any Court, Judge, Magistrate, British Consul or Vice-Consul, or representative of Her Majesty, or of the Government of India, shall be admissible in evidence.

21. An impression of any document made by a copying machine, or a representation of any thing made by means of photography, or of any other process which affords a reasonable assurance of correctness, shall be admissible in evidence, wherever under these Rules the production of the original may be dispensed with.

Persons who may testify.

22. Those persons only shall be incompetent to testify who from tender years, or from unsoundness of mind, or from any other cause appear to the judge to be incapable of understanding the questions addressed to them.

Privilege.

23. A witness is not at liberty to disclose a communication,—

(1.)—When such communication relates to affairs of State, and its disclosure has not been sanctioned by the proper officer.

(2.)—Where the communication was made by one of a married couple to the other during their marriage, and did not relate to a matter then in dispute in a suit pending between them, and where the consent of the person who made it, or, if such person be dead, of his or her representative in interest, has not been obtained for such disclosure.

(3.)—Where the witness is a barrister, attorney, or vakeel, or an interpreter or intermediate agent between the client and his legal adviser, and the communication was made by the client or principal to the witness in the course of his professional employment, or consists of any advice given or conveyed by the witness professionally to his client or principal, or of the contents of any document of his client or principal, the knowledge of which the witness has acquired in the course of his professional employment, and where the client or principal or his representative in interest has not consented to the disclosure of such communication.

(4.) Where the disclosure demanded of the witness consists in the production of documents belonging to another person who would not be bound to produce them if in his possession, and who has not consented to their production.

24. A witness is not compellable to disclose to the Court any confidential communication which may have taken place between him and his legal professional adviser.

25. No communication made in furtherance of a criminal purpose is protected from disclosure.

26. A witness summoned to produce a document shall, if the same be in his custody, possession, or power, be bound to bring it into Court, notwithstanding any objection to the right of the party calling for it to compel its production or to its being read, or being put in as evidence, or to the disclosure of its contents.

The validity of any such objection made by the person bringing the document shall be determined by the Court; and for the better determination thereof, it shall be lawful for the Court to receive any admissible evidence which such person may give respecting it, and it shall also be lawful for the Court, unless the document relates to affairs of State, to inspect it, and, if necessary, to employ any person to interpret it under the obligation of an oath, and not to disclose its contents except to the Court, unless the Court shall decide that the document is to be given in evidence.

27. No question shall be put to a married person which substantially amounts to inquiring whether that person has had sexual intercourse forbidden to him or her by the law to which he or she is subject.

28. No question regarding the occurrence of sexual intercourse between a husband and wife shall be put to either of them, except in the case of Christians, where the suit is for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of bodily incapacity; and except in the case of persons who are not Christians, where the knowledge of the fact inquired after is necessary to the determination of some question between the husband and wife according to the law to which they are subject.

Examination of Witnesses.

29. The party at whose instance a witness is examined may, with the permission of the Court, cross-examine such witness, to test his veracity, in the same manner as if the witness had not been called at his instance, and may be allowed to show that the witness has varied from a previous statement made by him.

30. In order to repel an attack on the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness, relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, shall be admissible, and for that purpose a copy duly certified of any deposition or statement taken before such authority shall be admissible in evidence that such deposition or statement was made, and that it was made at the time and place, and under the circumstances, if any, which shall be stated in the certificate or on the face of the deposition or statement.

31. It shall not be lawful to ask a witness, in order to test his credit, any question the answer to which might criminate, or might tend, directly or indirectly, to criminate him, or might expose or tend, directly or indirectly, to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture of any kind. But a witness shall not be excused from answering any question relevant to the matter in issue in any cause upon the ground that the answer to such question would or might criminate, or tend to criminate him, or that it would or might expose, or tend to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture. Provided that no answer which a witness shall be compelled to give shall, except for the purpose of punishing him for wilfully giving false evidence in such cause, be used as evidence against him in any criminal proceeding.

32. No evidence is admissible to contradict the answers of a party or a witness as to matters affecting his character, but not otherwise bearing upon any question in issue in the cause.

Evidence of statements or conduct of a witness inconsistent with his evidence as to a question directly in issue in a cause is not excluded by this rule.

Illustrations.

(a.) A claim against an underwriter is resisted on the ground of fraud. The party claimant is asked whether in a former transaction he had not made a fraudulent claim. He denies it. Evidence is not admissible to show that he had made such fraudulent claim.

(b.) In a suit by A against B a witness for A is asked whether he had not been dismissed from B's service for misconduct. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to contradict the witness's statement as to such dismissal. The evidence is not admissible.

(c.) In an action against A for goods sold to him by B, a witness for B deposes that he saw the goods sold and delivered. He is asked whether he had not given a different account of the transaction. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had given such different account. This evidence is admissible. He is asked whether he had not, after the date of the alleged sale, dealt with B as the owner of the goods. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had so dealt with B. This evidence is admissible. He is asked whether he had not given a false account of another transaction not in issue in the cause. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had given such false account. This evidence is not admissible.

(d.) The witness is asked whether he had not received money or a promise of some favour from B to induce him to give his evidence. He denies it. Evidence is tendered to show that he had received such money or promise. This evidence is admissible.

33. A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing, or reduced into writing, relative to the subject-matter of the cause, without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. The Court may, however, at any time during the trial, require the production of the writing for its inspection, and may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as may seem fit.

34. A witness may while under examination refer to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned, or so soon afterwards that it may be reasonably presumed that the transaction was fresh in his memory; and he may for the like purpose refer to a writing made by any other person, and read by the witness at the time of such transaction, or so soon afterwards that it may be reasonably presumed that the transaction was fresh in his memory. In such case the writing shall be produced and may be seen by the adverse party, who may, if he choose, cross-examine the witness upon it.

Number of Witnesses.

35. A Court, if satisfied by the evidence given, may in any case act on such evidence, although there may be only the testimony of one witness.

This rule is not rendered inapplicable by the circumstance that the testimony is given in a trial for giving false evidence, or for any offence against the State, or that it is the testimony of an accomplice.

Things of which Judicial Notice is to be taken.

36. The Courts shall take judicial notice of,—

(1).—All Acts, Regulations and Ordinances having the force of law in any part of British India;

(2).—All public Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and all local and personal Acts directed by Parliament to be judicially noticed;

(3.)—The names, titles and functions of the persons filling for the time being any public office any part of India;

(4.)—All divisions of time, the geographical divisions of the world, the territories under the dominion of the British Crown, the commencement, continuation and termination of hostilities between the British Crown and any other State, and the existence, title and national flag of every sovereign or State recognized by the British Crown.

37. Every Court shall take judicial notice of the names of its own Members and Officers and of their deputies and subordinate Officers or Assistants, and also of all Officers acting in execution of its process, and of all Advocates, Attorneys, Proctors, Vakeels, Pleaders, and other persons authorized by law to act before it.

Sources of Information to which Courts may refer.

38. A Court may, in order to inform itself in respect of any of the matters mentioned in sections 36 and 37 of this Act, and also on matters of public history, literature, science, or art, refer, for the purposes of evidence, to such books, maps, almanacks, or charts as the Court shall consider to be of authority on the subject to which they relate.

Saving of Registration law.

39. The foregoing Rules are to take effect subject to the provisions of the law for the time being in force regarding the registration of any document.

Repeal of Acts.

40. Act No. XIX of 1853 (to amend the Law of Evidence in the Civil Courts of the East India Company in the Bengal Presidency), section 19, and Act No. II of 1855 (for the further improvement of the Law of Evidence) are hereby repealed.

Short title.

41. This Act may be called "The Indian Evidence Act."

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

THE present Bill is comprised in the fifth report which the Commissioners appointed to prepare a body of substantive law for India have recently submitted to Her Majesty. The remarks which the Commissioners have prefixed to their draft follow this statement, and will be found to give full information as to the object of the Bill, and the reasons for the changes which it proposes to introduce.

SIMLA,
22nd October 1868.

REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

WE, Your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to prepare a body of substantive law for India, now humbly submit to Your Majesty rules of law which we have prepared on the subject of evidence.

India does not at present possess an uniform law upon this subject. Within the Presidency towns the English law of evidence is in force, modified by certain Acts of the Indian Legislature, of which Act II of 1855 is the most important.

This Act contains many valuable provisions. It extends the range of judicial notice, and facilitates the proof of documents, of foreign systems of law, and of matters of public history. It removes incompetency to testify by reason of interest or relationship; renders parties to suits liable to be called as witnesses, and makes husband and wife competent witnesses for or against each other in civil proceedings; renders dying declarations admissible, though the declarant may have entertained hopes of recovery; provides that witnesses may be cross-examined by the party who called them, and that they shall not be excused from answering questions because they may thereby criminate themselves. Declarations which were against the pecuniary interest of the persons who made them, and entries according to the usual course of business, both of which kinds of evidence the English law admits only in case of death, are under this Act admissible if the person who made the declaration or the entry has become incapable of giving evidence or if his testimony cannot be procured. The Act also gives to books regularly kept, and to certain commercial documents, the character of corroborative though not of independent evidence, and makes entries in such books independent evidence of certain formal matters; it extends the class of persons whose declarations are admissible in case of pedigree, and provides in effect that mistakes committed in the rejection or reception of evidence shall not lead to a new trial or to the reversal of a decision unless a substantial failure of justice has been caused thereby. The Act, however, bears reference in many places to the existing law, and it appears to have been designed, not as a complete body of rules, but as supplementary to and corrective of the English law, and also of the customary law of evidence prevailing in those parts of British India where the English law is not administered.

This customary law has not assumed any definite form; the Mahommedan law, since the enactment of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, has ceased to have any validity in the country courts, even in criminal matters; and those courts have in fact no fixed rules of evidence except those contained in Act II of 1855. They are not required to follow the English law as such, although they are not debarred from following it where they regard it as the most equitable.

In laying down uniform rules for the guidance of the Indian judges in general, as well in the Courts just mentioned as in those in which the English law of evidence has hitherto prevailed, we do not think that it would be advisable to adopt a system so artificial as that which has grown up in this country.

The English practice has been moulded in a great degree by our social and legal institutions and our forms of procedure; and much of it is admitted to be unsuited to the various states of society and the different forms of property which are to be met with in India.

In England the aim has been to avoid presenting to the consideration of the jury whatever it was thought could not safely be presented to an unprofessional tribunal. In order to obtain this end various kinds of evidence, which were deemed little worthy of credit, were pronounced inadmissible, and a great deal of evidence which, if duly weighed and dispassionately considered, would tend to the elucidation of truth, is absolutely excluded. On the other hand, evidence is admitted which is at least as dangerous as that which is shut out. Thus parent and child cannot refuse to bear testimony for or against each other in criminal cases, while a wife cannot be asked a question on the trial of her husband, unless the trial be for an offence committed against herself. In matrimonial cases the inconsistencies of the law as to the competency of the married persons to give evidence cause frequent embarrassment, and even occasional failure of justice.

In a country like India, where the task of judicial investigation is attended with peculiar difficulties, and where it is the duty of the judge in all civil and in some criminal cases, to decide without a jury, there is greater danger of miscarriage from the mind of the court being uninformed than from its being unduly influenced by the information laid before it. It seems, therefore, better to afford every facility for the admission of truth although with some risk that falsehood or error may be mixed with it, than to narrow, with a view to the exclusion of falsehood, the channels by which truth is admitted. It is of course impossible to admit all evidence that may be offered, for this would lead to excessive waste of time, but we have provided that all relevant evidence not expressly excluded by our rules shall be admissible, and that except in those few cases where the law itself attaches a special importance or effect to particular evidence, the court shall decide for itself whether any weight, and what weight, shall be assigned to each piece of evidence that is submitted to it. The judge must, of course, form his own opinion regarding the relevancy of any evidence which the parties may desire to submit to him, but it is often difficult, especially in the early stage of a trial, to show the exact bearing of each piece of evidence upon the issues. It is by no means our desire that our rules should be understood as imposing upon the judges the use of excessive strictness in excluding evidence of which the applicability cannot be fully shown at the moment when the evidence is tendered. We have, however, inserted provisions intended to a guard against the trial of collateral issues arising out of questions asked with a view to impugn the credit of witnesses.

It will be seen that we have discarded, for the most part, the rules which limit the discretion of the Court in drawing its conclusions from the whole of the evidence. While we do not interfere with those provisions of the Act for the registration of assurances or of the Code of Criminal Procedure which recognize certain things as primâ facie evidence, that is to say, as conclusive unless met by counter-evidence; yet we do not by our own rules attach this character to evidence of any class, nor,—except where the testimony of a witness has been attacked,—do we recognize anything as corroborative though not independent evidence. We have provided that a Court may act upon the testimony of a single witness, even in the case of the gravest offences against the State, or of perjury, or of criminal charges supported by the evidence of accomplices alone.

An attempt to define all the cases in which, and the purposes for which, particular evidence may be received, would in our opinion impede instead of aiding the investigation of truth. We hope that the course which we have adopted will render it easier for those who administer the law to avoid the error so often committed in practice where a strict standard of admissibility exists, that of supposing that whatever evidence is admissible comes in some degree accredited to the court.

The exclusion even of relevant evidence may be desirable, when the evidence is such that people are naturally inclined to attach undue importance to it; when it is such as cannot be admitted without the danger of encouraging forgery; or when it is such as cannot be received or at least cannot be extorted, without injury to interests which are even more important than the judicial investigation of truth.

Although we have laid it down generally that all relevant evidence shall be admissible, we have thought it necessary to make certain exceptions from this rule. These exceptions relate chiefly to that kind of evidence which is described in the English books under the title "hearsay." We have, however, abstained from making use of the word "hearsay" from the uncertainty and vagueness of the meaning usually attributed to that word. What a witness says as to what some other person has said or written may be called "hearsay" in one sense of that word, and that the widest or popular sense; but the statements by a witness of what he has heard another person say may be in fact (as in cases of slander) the very matter in issue; or in other cases may be part of the circumstances which it is essential to ascertain. On the other hand, "hearsay" may be defined to be that which a witness does not say as of his own knowledge, but says that another has said or signified to him. This is probably a more strict and accurate definition of the word "hearsay" as used in the English law; but it does not include all that is known in that law as hearsay.

After much considering this subject, we have thought that it would promote a more accurate apprehension of our meaning, and be of more practical utility in the Indian courts, if we were to exclude the word altogether. We have, therefore, without attempting any definition of the word "hearsay," endeavoured to lay down rules for the exclusion of that class of evidence in the cases in which we think it ought to be excluded, and for the admission of it in the cases in which we think it ought to be admitted. We have accordingly gone through the various classes of evidence, in which arises the question of admissibility or exclusion of what is called in the English law "hearsay," and have endeavoured to state the rule applicable to each class.

Most of the rules for the admissibility of this kind of evidence are recognized by the English law, others are in accordance with the Indian Act II. of 1855, above referred to, or are intended to relax the English rules still further than was done by that enactment.

We have, for instance, made admissible in evidence that which has been spoken, written, or otherwise intimated in the ordinary course of business by a person who has since died or become incapable of giving evidence, or whose presence cannot be procured; and we have admitted entries in books kept in the ordinary course of business. We have also made admissible written acknowledgments of the receipt of money, goods, securities, or property of any kind, and documents used in commerce. Declarations which under the English law are only admitted because they have been made against interest will, by the effect of our rules, be excluded, unless they have been made in the ordinary course of business. The test of pecuniary interest is exceedingly difficult of application, and appears to us to be of little value as a test of truth.

We have admitted statements as to matters of reputation and of pedigree made by persons since dead or incapacitated, or whose presence cannot be procured; adding in the case of pedigree a proviso that the person who made the statement shall have had special means of knowledge. We have discarded the condition of the English law which requires that the statement shall have been made before the controversy had arisen, as we think that this circumstance affects rather the weight than the admissibility of the statement.

We have allowed a limited effect, as evidence, to newspaper reports of public meetings.

The indulgence afforded to witnesses by the existing law in permitting them to refer to contemporaneous memoranda appears to us to be carried too far when copies of such memoranda are allowed to be used for the purpose; and our rules do not permit the use of copies.

Another cause of exclusion applies to documentary evidence. Unless some degree of caution were observed with regard to the authentication of writings, great facilities would be afforded for the fabrication of documents. We have, therefore, laid down rules for the evidence to be required of the proper execution of documents, and retaining the distinction between primary and secondary evidence, have provided against the admission of the latter where the former is procurable. We hope that these rules will, in combination with the laws lately passed by the Indian Legislature for the registration of assurances, tend to the improvement of Indian documentary evidence.*

The third case in which we have excluded testimony is, where its admission would be dangerous to the public service, or inconsistent with decency or morality, with the confidence of married life, or with the freedom of intercourse between a client and his legal adviser.

We have provided that questions of a criminatory tendency shall not be asked merely in order to test the credit of a witness.

We have not adopted s. 19 of Act XIX of 1853, which excuses witnesses from producing their own title-deeds, a provision which must, under an improved system of registration, become every day less suited to India. Judges will, no doubt, protect witnesses from the production of their title deeds when they are not relevant and material to the cause.

We have not adopted in all respects the doctrines of the English law on the subject of the effect of previous decisions when adduced as evidence.

To those judgments, which are admitted by the laws of all other countries as conclusive evidence not only between the parties but as against strangers, we have affixed the same character in India; in all other cases, we have provided that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction upon a matter directly in issue shall be admissible as evidence between the same parties upon the same matter directly in issue in another cause, but that it shall not be conclusive. As regards strangers, we have provided that it shall be admissible merely as evidence that such judgment was pronounced between the parties.

We have thought that the court will arrive at the truth more accurately if left to draw their inference from the evidence given, than if fettered by rules of presumption, which are, in our opinion, incapable of being laid down so as to be universally applicable.

It may perhaps be made a question how far the subject of evidence falls under the head of substantive law, and some of the sections of the draft now submitted certainly border closely on procedure. Those sections, however, have not found a place in either of the Codes of Procedure. We have, therefore, inserted them (with some modifications), as it appears to us that the Law of Evidence ought not to be left to be gleaned from many different enactments, but, that so much of it as is not to be found in the Codes of Procedure should be, as far as possible comprised in the rules of law now submitted by us, and that the enactments which will thus be rendered unnecessary should be repealed.

We recommend the repeal of so much of Acts II of 1855 and XIX of 1833 as remains unrepealed, except s. 26 of the latter enactment, which does not form part of the Law of Evidence.

Enactments repealed.

A Bill for imposing Stamp Duties on certain Instruments.

CHAPTER I.—PRELIMINARY.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called 'The General Stamp Act, 1869.'

Extent of Act.

It extends to the whole of British India.

Commencement of Act.

And it shall come into force on the first day of April, 1869.

Repeal of enactments.

2. From the time at which this Act comes into force, the enactments specified in the sixth schedule hereto annexed shall be repealed to the extent specified in the third column of the same schedule.

Interpretation Clause.

3. In this Act and the Schedules hereto, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context,—

'Affidavit' includes every declaration in writing, on oath or affirmation, made before a person authorised by law to administer an oath:

'Award' includes every decision in writing by an arbitrator or umpire:

'Bill of Exchange' includes a hundí and every other instrument, except a cheque, whereby a person is ordered to pay to another a specified sum of money:

'Bill of Lading' includes every instrument signed by the owner of a ship or his agent, acknowledging the receipt of goods therein described, and undertaking to deliver them at a port and to a person therein mentioned:

'Bond' includes every instrument whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, on condition that the obligation shall be void if a specified act is performed:

'Bottomry Bond' includes every instrument whereby the master of a sea-going ship borrows money on the security of the ship to enable him to prosecute her voyage:

'Charter-party' includes every instrument (other than an agreement for the hire of a tug-steamer) whereby a ship or some principal part thereof is let for the specified purposes of the charterer:

'Cheque' includes every instrument whereby a bank, banker, or person acting as a banker is ordered to pay on demand a specified sum of money:

'Collector' means Collector of a District, and includes Deputy Commissioner or any officer having jurisdiction equivalent to that of a Collector of a District:

'Composition-deed' includes every instrument executed by a debtor, whereby the debtor conveys his property for the benefit of his creditors, or whereby payment of a composition or dividend on their debts is secured to the creditors, or whereby provision is made for the continuance of the debtor's business, under the supervision of inspectors or under letters of license, for the benefit of his creditors:

'Conveyance' means any instrument, except a settlement, mortgage-deed, or lease, by which property is transferred inter vivos:

'Counterpart' means the duplicate of a conveyance, settlement, mortgage-deed or lease, such duplicate not being executed by the grantor, settlor, mortgagor or lessor, but by some other party to the instrument: it includes a kabúliyát:

'Delivery-order' includes every instrument entitling or intended to entitle any person therein named, or his assigns, or the holder thereof, to the delivery of any goods of the value of twenty rupees or upwards lying in or upon any dock, port, warehouse or wharf, such instrument being signed by or on behalf of the owner of such goods upon the sale or transfer of the property therein:

'Dock-warrant' includes every instrument evidencing the title of any person therein named or his assign, or the holder thereof, to the property in any goods lying in or upon any dock, warehouse or wharf, such instrument being signed or certified by or on behalf of the company or person in whose custody such goods may be:

'Lease' includes every instrument by which one person lets, or agrees to let, immoveable property to another for a specified term:

'Letter of Credit' includes every instrument by which one person requests another to give credit to the person in whose favour it is drawn:

'Letter of License' includes every agreement between a debtor and his creditors that the latter shall, for a specified time, suspend their claims and allow the debtor to carry on business at his own discretion:

'Mortgage-deed' includes every instrument evidencing a pledge of property for securing the payment of money:

'Negotiable Instrument' includes Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes and Cheques:

'Notarial act' means any instrument made or signed by a Notary Public in the execution of the duties of his office, and includes every like instrument made or signed by a consul, attorney, or other person authorized by law to act as a Notary Public:

'Paper' includes vellum, parchment or any other material on which an instrument may be written:

'Power of Attorney' includes every instrument empowering a person to act in the stead of the person executing it:

'Promissory Note' includes every instrument whereby the maker engages absolutely to pay a specified sum of money to another at a time therein limited, or on demand, or at sight:

'Protest' means a declaration in writing made by a Notary Public, or other person authorized to act as such, attesting the dishonour of a Bill of Exchange or Promissory Note:

'Protest of the Master of a Ship' includes every declaration of the particulars of her voyage, drawn up by him with a view to the adjustment of losses, or the calculation of averages, and every declaration in writing made by him against the charterers or the consignees for not loading or unloading the ship:

'Proxy' means an instrument whereby a person authorizes another to vote for him at a meeting:

'Release' includes every instrument whereby a person renounces a claim upon another person, or against any specified property:

'Respondentia bond' includes every instrument securing a loan on the cargo laden or to be laden on board a ship, and making repayment contingent on the arrival of the cargo at the port of destination:

'Schedule' includes every list or inventory separate and distinct from an instrument and therein referred to as part thereof or as material thereto; but does not include any public map, plan, survey or award; and

'Settlement' means any instrument (other than a Will) whereby the destination or devolution of moveable or immoveable property is settled or agreed to be settled.

CHAPTER II.—STAMP DUTIES CHARGEABLE UNDER THIS ACT.

Scheduled duties chargeable.

4. For every instrument mentioned in the Schedules hereto annexed and executed in British India after this Act comes into force, or executed out of British India after this Act comes into force, but relating to any property within British India, or executed out of British India, whether before or after this Act comes into force, but in any manner becoming obligatory therein after this Act comes into force, there shall be payable to Government, as stamp duty, the amount indicated in any schedule hereto annexed, to be the proper duty for such instrument.

Duties how levied.

5. The duty so chargeable shall be levied,—

By adhesive stamps.

(a.)—On the several instruments specified in Schedule I to this Act,—by means of adhesive stamps to be affixed to such instruments subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned:

Provided that the duties chargeable on bills of exchange, bills of lading, cheques, and such other of the said instruments as the Governor General of India in Council, by notification in the Gazette of India, from time to time directs, may be denoted by stamps impressed on the paper whereon such instruments are written, and the Collector shall, on receiving payment of the full amount of the stamps required to be impressed on the forms hereinafter mentioned, cause all blank forms of such instruments, which may be brought to him for the purpose, to be stamped accordingly.

By impressed stamps.

(b.)—On the several instruments specified in Schedules II, III, and IV to this Act,—by means of bi-coloured stamps to be impressed on the paper whereon the instruments are written in such manner as the said Governor General may from time to time direct.

Duties by whom payable.

6. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the expense of providing the necessary stamp in the following cases shall be borne—

1st.—In the case of any instrument specified in Schedules I and II to this Act, other than a policy of insurance, a settlement, a mortgage-deed, a lease or a counterpart of a lease, by the person drawing, making or executing such instrument:

2nd.—In the case of a policy of insurance, by the insured:

3rd.—In the case of a settlement, by the settlor:

4th.—In the case of a conveyance, mortgage-deed or lease, by the grantee, mortgagee or lessee:

5th.—In the case of a counterpart of a lease, by the lessor; and 6th.—In the case of an instrument of partition, by the parties thereto in proportion to their respective shares in the property comprised therein.

Duties on Bills of Exchange.

7. The duty imposed by this Act on bills of exchange shall be chargeable (a) on all bills drawn and payable in British India, (b) on all bills drawn in, but payable out of, British India, and (c) on all bills drawn out of, but accepted, or paid, or endorsed, transferred, or otherwise negotiated within British India.

Bills drawn in sets.

8. When a bill of exchange is drawn within British India in a set of two or more parts, the stamp required by this Act shall be affixed to, or impressed on, the first part, and each of the other parts shall on being brought to the Collector, and on proof to his satisfaction of the first part having been duly stamped, be stamped by him with the words "Duty paid."

Bill drawn out of British India.

9. The holder of any bill of exchange drawn out of British India, and not stamped as required by this Act shall, before he presents the same for acceptance or for payment, or endorses, transfers, or otherwise negotiates such bill, affix thereto a proper adhesive stamp for denoting the duty with which such bill is chargeable under this Act.

Bill, note or bond reserving interest.

10. Where interest is expressly made payable by the terms of a bill of exchange, promissory note or bond, the instrument shall not be chargeable with a duty higher than that with which it would have been chargeable had no mention of interest been made therein.

Stamp duty on instruments of a double character.

11. When any instrument is drawn or made in such form as to come under two or more denominations of instruments chargeable with different rates of stamp duty under this Act, the instrument shall be charged with the highest of such rates.

Optional stamps where value of subject-matter is indeterminate.

12. When the amount or value of the subject-matter of any instrument chargeable under this Act and referred to or mentioned in section six cannot be ascertained, the proper stamp to be borne by such instrument may be determined by the person bound under that section to provide the stamp:

Provided that under such instrument nothing shall be recoverable more than the highest amount or value for which, if stated in an instrument of the same denomination, the stamp actually used under such option would have been sufficient; and no such instrument shall be valid in respect of any amount or value exceeding that for which such stamp would be sufficient.

Bond, &c., for payment of annuity.

13. The whole amount secured by a bond, promissory note or mortgage-deed for the payment of an annuity shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be ten times the amount of the annual payment.

Several instruments used in a single transaction.

14. Where more instruments than one are required for the completion of any transaction involving the execution of any conveyance, settlement, mortgage-deed or lease, the proper stamp required by this Act for such conveyance, settlement, mortgage-deed or lease, shall be borne by the principal instrument executed in such transaction, and each of the other instruments shall bear the stamp specified in Schedule IV to this Act as applicable to a collateral instrument.

And where of several instruments, a doubt shall arise which is the principal, it shall be lawful for the parties to determine for themselves which for the purposes of this section shall be so deemed to be the principal instrument.

Instruments exempt from duty.

15. Nothing in this Act shall render the following instruments chargeable with duty:—

(1.) Receipt or discharge granted to an actual cultivator for the rent of land paying revenue to Government.

(2.) Receipt or discharge written upon any negotiable instrument duly stamped according to the laws in force in British India at the date thereof.

(3.) Receipt given for money or securities for money deposited in any Bank or in the hands of any Banker or person acting as a Banker to be accounted for:

Provided the same be not expressed to be received of or by the hands of any other than the person to whom the same is to be accounted for:

Provided further, that this exemption shall not extend to a receipt or acknowledgment for any sum paid or deposited for, or upon a letter of allotment of a share in respect of a call upon any scrip or share of or in any Company or Association or proposed or intended Company or Association.

(4.) Receipt or discharge endorsed or otherwise written upon or contained in any bond, mortgage-deed or other security, or any conveyance or instrument whatever duly stamped according to the laws in force in British India at the date thereof, acknowledging the receipt of the consideration money therein expressed, or the receipt of any principal money, interest or annuity thereby secured.

(5.) Document given by an inland carrier acknowledging the receipt of goods conveyed by such carrier.

(6.) Transfer by endorsement of a negotiable instrument or a policy of marine insurance or of insurance against fire.

(7.) Bond to Government for the due performance of the duties of any office of which the salary does not exceed ten Rupees.

(8.) Agreement or memorandum of an agreement for or relating to the sale of goods or merchandize.

(9.) Lease granted to an actual cultivator, unless a fine or premium be paid in consideration of such lease.

(10.) Counterpart of such lease.

(11.) Surrender of land executed by an actual cultivator to his landlord.

(12.) Affidavit made for the sole purpose of enabling any person to receive any pension or charitable allowance.

(13.) Copy of any paper which a public officer is by law required to make or furnish in his official capacity.

CHAPTER III.—Unstamped or Insufficiently Stamped Documents.

Instruments not duly stamped inadmissible in evidence.

16. No instrument chargeable with stamp duty under this Act shall be received in any court of justice, or by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence, as creating, modifying, transferring, or extinguishing, or purporting to create, modify, transfer or extinguish, any right or obligation, or as evidence in any civil proceeding, or shall be acted upon in any such court, or by any such person as aforesaid, or by any public officer, or shall be registered by any officer acting under any law for the registration of assurances or in any public office, or shall be authenticated by any public officer, unless such instrument bears a stamp of a value not less than the amount of the duty with which it is chargeable under this Act.

Except in criminal proceedings.

Every instrument chargeable with stamp duty shall be admitted in evidence in any criminal proceeding (other than proceedings under Chapter 22 of the Code of Criminal Procedure) although it may not have the stamp required by law impressed thereon or affixed thereto.

Bill unstamped or stamp uncancelled.

17. Subject to the provisions contained in section twenty-four, no person taking or receiving from another a bill of exchange requiring an adhesive stamp under this Act, either in payment or as a security, or by purchase or otherwise, shall be entitled to recover thereon, or to make the same available for any purpose, unless at the time when he so takes or receives such bill, such stamp as aforesaid is affixed thereto and cancelled in manner hereby directed.

Powers of civil courts as to unstamped or insufficiently stamped instruments.

18. When any instrument chargeable with stamp duty under Schedules II, III or IV to this Act, executed on paper not bearing the proper stamp, is produced in a civil court, the court, if satisfied that the omission to execute such instrument on paper bearing the proper stamp, did not arise out of any intention to evade payment of the proper duty payable thereon, and on payment of such duty, or, in the case of an insufficiently stamped instrument, of the sum required to make up the full amount chargeable on such instrument, together with a penalty of the following amount (that is to say):—

Penalty.

if the instrument is produced within one year from the date of its execution ... .. ten times or, if it is produced after one year from such date ... .. twenty times such proper stamp duty or deficient portion thereof as aforesaid, shall certify by endorsement on such instrument that the proper stamp duty has been levied thereon.

Such certificate shall be conclusive as to the amount of stamp-duty leviable on such instrument, and the said instrument shall thereupon be receivable in evidence as if originally executed on paper bearing the proper stamp.

Registration of penalties levied by civil courts.

19. a. An entry of every such payment showing amount thereof shall be made the in a book to be kept by the Court, and shall also be endorsed on the instrument and signed by the presiding officer,

b. The Court shall at the end of every month make a return to the Collector of the money (if any) which it has so received, distinguishing between the sums received by way of penalty and the sums received by way of duty, stating the number and title of the suit, the name of the party from whom the money was received, and the date (if any) and description of the instrument.

c. The Court shall pay over all money so received to the Collector or to such person as he may from time to time appoint to receive the same.

Impounding unstamped instruments in Courts.

20. If it appear to a civil or criminal court that any instrument filed or exhibited in such court was executed on unstamped or insufficiently stamped paper with the manifest intention of evading payment of the stamp duty prescribed by this Act for such instrument, the Court may impound the instrument and send it to the Collector, and he shall thereupon prosecute the offender.

Impounding unstamped instruments in public office.

21. If any instrument not bearing the stamp prescribed therefor by this Act is produced before any registering officer, or in any public office other than a civil or criminal court, the registering or other public officer shall impound the instrument, and send it forthwith to the Collector.

Powers of Collector as to unstamped or insufficiently stamped instruments.

22. a. When any such instrument has been so sent or brought before the Collector, otherwise than for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication thereon, as hereinafter provided, he shall either proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section eighteen, exercising the powers thereby conferred on a civil court; or if it appear that the instrument was executed on unstamped, or insufficiently stamped, paper with the manifest intention of evading payment of the proper stamp duty, the Collector shall prosecute all the persons that have executed the said instrument or such of them as to him may seem fit:

Prosecution.

Remission of penalty.

b. Provided that in any case coming under this section, if where the instrument has been brought within one year from the date of its execution to the Collector or other public officer, by whom it has been sent to the Collector under section twenty-one, and if the Collector is satisfied that the omission or neglect to execute such instrument on paper bearing the proper stamp arose solely from urgent necessity or unavoidable accident, he may remit the penalty prescribed by section eighteen:

c. Provided also that in any case coming under this section in which an instrument, other than a bill of exchange, purports to have been executed out of British India, if the Collector is satisfied that the instrument was so executed, and also that it has been brought to him within the two months next after its arrival in British India, he shall, on payment of the duty with which such instrument would have been chargeable if executed in British India, certify by indorsement thereon that the proper stamp duty has been levied upon it.

d. Such certificate shall be conclusive as to the amount of stamp duty leviable on the instrument, which shall thereupon be receivable in evidence as if originally executed on paper bearing the proper stamp.

Validity of instrument for which collector levies penalty.

23. When the Collector elects to proceed under section eighteen, he shall, after endorsing on the instrument the certificate thereby directed, return such instrument to the registering or other public officer by whom it was sent or to the person by whom it was produced, and the said instrument shall thereupon be, and be deemed to have been, as valid as if it was originally executed on paper bearing the proper stamp.

Power to stamp instruments chargeable with one anna.

24. a. When any bill, cheque or order for the payment of money on demand, or any receipt, chargeable with the stamp duty of one anna comes to the hand of any person unstamped, he may affix thereto the necessary adhesive stamp, and cancel the same in the manner required by this Act, and upon so doing, may charge the duty against the person who ought to have paid the same, or deduct such duty from the sum so directed to be paid.

b. Such bill, cheque, order or receipt shall, so far as relates to the stamp duty chargeable thereon, be valid; but this shall not relieve any person from the liability to the penalty which he may have incurred by issuing or giving the said bill, cheque, order or receipt unstamped.

Procedure where receipts are required.

25. a. Any person, or the agent of any person, from whom money or goods exceeding in amount or value twenty Rupees is or are due or claimed to be due, and who shall have paid such money, or delivered such goods, may provide a piece of paper with an adhesive stamp of one anna affixed thereto, and may require of the person entitled to such money or goods, or any agent to whom the same shall have been paid or delivered, a receipt for such money or goods and also the value of the said stamp.

Refusal to give receipts.

b. If any person to whom money or goods shall have been so paid or delivered refuses to give such receipt upon demand thereof, or to pay the value of the said stamp thereon, he shall be liable for every such offence to a fine of one hundred rupees.

After-stamping when inadmissible.

26. Except as provided in section twenty-four, no stamp shall be affixed to, or impressed on, any instrument specified in Schedule 1 to this Act, subsequent to the execution thereof, nor shall the provisions of sections eighteen and twenty-two apply to any such instrument.

CHAPTER IV.—CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

Penalty for executing instrument on paper not duly stamped.

27. Whoever makes, signs or issues or, except as provided in section twenty-three, accepts, endorses, transfers, pays or receives payment of any bill of exchange, promissory note, cheque or other similar instrument liable to any of the duties hereby imposed without the same being duly stamped, and whoever makes, executes, or signs any other instrument liable to any of such duties without the same being duly stamped, shall, for every such instrument, be liable to fine not exceeding one hundred rupees, or if ten times the value of the proper stamp or, in case an insufficient stamp has been used ten times the deficient amount thereof, exceeds Rupees one hundred, then to fine not exceeding ten times such value or deficient amount.

Penalty for presenting, &c., unstamped bills of exchange.

28. Whoever presents for acceptance or for payment, or accepts, pays or endorses, transfers, or in any manner negotiates any such bill as aforesaid, whereon there is not such adhesive stamp as aforesaid duly affixed, shall be liable to the penalty prescribed by section twenty-seven.

Cancelling stamps on bills by holder.

29. Whoever presents for acceptance or payment a bill of exchange to which an adhesive stamp has been affixed under Section nine, and whoever endorses, transfers, or in any manner negotiates such bill, shall, before delivering the same out of his hands, custody or power, cancel the stamp so affixed, by writing thereon his name or the initial letters thereof or the name of his firm, and the day and year on which he so writes the same or by affixing thereon or across the same, the seal or mark which he is in the habit of using,

in such manner as to show that the stamp has been made use of, and so that the same shall not admit of being used again.

Penalty for failure to cancel such stamps.

And whoever ought, as directed by this Act to cancel such stamp in manner aforesaid, and refuses or neglects so to do, shall be liable to the penalty prescribed in section twenty-seven.

Penalty for post-dating bills of exchange.

30. Whoever, in order to evade the payment of the duty prescribed by this Act for such instrument, makes and issues any bill of exchange bearing a date subsequent to the date on which it is issued, and whoever knowing that such bill has been so post-dated, takes or receives such bill, or accepts, pays, endorses, transfers or in any manner negotiates the same, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

Cancellation of adhesive stamp by maker or executant.

31. Whenever an adhesive stamp is used as hereinbefore authorized, the person making or executing the instrument to which such stamp is affixed shall, before delivering the instrument out of his hands, custody or power, cancel the stamp so used by writing thereon his name or the initial letters thereof, or the name of his firm, and the date on which such instrument is made or executed, so that such stamp shall not admit of being used again.

Penalty for not cancelling stamp.

Whoever makes or signs any instrument with an adhesive stamp thereon when an adhesive stamp is allowed to be used, and does not bonâ fide in manner aforesaid cancel such stamp, shall be liable to fine not exceeding one hundred Rupees.

Consideration to be stated.

32*a*. When any moveable or immoveable property is sold, the full consideration-money directly or indirectly paid or secured, or agreed to be paid for the same, shall be truly set forth in words at length in the principal or only instrument whereby the property sold is conveyed to, or vested in, the purchaser or in any other person by his direction.

Mortgage-money to be deemed purchase-money.

b. When any property is sold and conveyed subject to any mortgage or bond or other debt, or to any gross or entire sum of money, such debt or sum shall be deemed the consideration-money or part of the consideration money (as the case may be) in respect whereof the duty chargeable under Schedule III to this Act shall be paid, notwithstanding the purchaser is not or does not become personally liable for such debt or sum, or does not agree to pay the same or to indemnify the purchaser against the same.

Penalty for not stating consideration.

c. If the full consideration-money is not set forth as aforesaid, the purchaser and the seller shall each be liable to fine not exceeding five hundred Rupees, and shall also pay a fine of five times the amount of the excess of duty with which such instrument would have been chargeable under this Act, if the full consideration-money had been duly set forth in such instrument in addition to the duty actually paid for the same.

Penalty on attorneys, &c., not inserting true consideration.

33. Any attorney, vakeel, pleader, mukhtár or other person employed in or about the preparing of any instrument in or upon which the full consideration-money is hereby required to be truly set forth, or employed for any of the parties thereto in anywise about or relating to the transaction therein mentioned, who inserts or sets forth, or causes to be inserted or set forth, in or upon any such instrument any other than the full consideration money, or abets, within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, the doing thereof respectively, shall, for every such offence, pay a fine not less than Rupees five hundred and not exceeding Rupees five thousand.

Every attorney, vakeel, pleader, or mukhtár convicted under this section shall from the date of such conviction be disabled to practise as an attorney, vakeel, pleader, or mukhtár.

Provided that no person shall be liable to any penalty or disability under this section, unless the duty actually paid for the instrument is less than would have been payable for the same in case the consideration-money had been truly set forth as aforesaid.

Recovery of fines.

34. All fines imposed under this Act may be recovered, if for offences committed outside the local limits of the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, in the manner prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure, and if for offences committed within those limits, in the manner prescribed by any Act regulating the Police of such towns in force for the time being.

Reward to informers.

35. Whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine under this Act, the convicting Magistrate may award any portion not exceeding one [illegible] to the person on whose information the offen[illegible] has been convicted.

CHAPTER V.—Jurisdiction.

Adjudication of doubt as to proper stamp.

36. When any instrument chargeable with stamp duty under this Act, whether previously stamped or not, is presented to the Collector, and the person presenting it desires to have the opinion of that officer to the duty with which it is so chargeable, and pays [illegible]e of five rupees, the Collector shall assess and [illegible]rge the duty to which, in his judgment, the in[illegible]ment is liable; and upon payment of such duty [illegible] of such a sum as, with the duty already paid thereon, is equal to the duty so assessed and charged, and of the penalty, if any, incurred through the instrument having been executed on insufficiently stamped paper, shall certify by endorsement on such instrument, that the full duty with which it [illegible]s chargeable under this Act has been paid.

The instrument shall thereupon be deemed to be duly stamped and receivable in evidence or otherwise in all courts and public offices:

Provided that nothing contained in the former part of this section shall authorize the Collector to make any such endorsement on an instrument comprised in Schedule I to this Act, and presented on unstamped or insufficiently stamped paper subsequent to the execution thereof.

Appeal against Collector's decision.

37. If the person presenting any such instrument, is dissatisfied with the judgment of the Collector, he may, upon paying the duty assessed by such judgment, including the penalty, if any, which would be leviable under section twenty-two if the instrument were produced in a civil court, and upon depositing twenty rupees for costs and charges, require the Collector to state specially and sign the case on which the question arose, together with his judgment thereon, and the Collector shall state and sign such case accordingly, and deliver it to the person making such requisition in order that he may appeal to the High Court.

And upon the application of the appellant (such notice as the High Court shall by any general rule direct being given to the Government pleader) the High Court shall hear the appeal and decide as to the stamp duty with which the instrument is chargeable under this Act, and award the costs (if any) payable by the appellant; and according to such decision the duty and penalty, if any, shall be deemed to have been payable.

If no excess of duty or penalty has been paid under the Collector's judgment, the amount deposited by the appellant shall be paid to Government, but if any such excess has been paid, the same, together with the amount of the deposit, shall be re-paid to the appellant.

And if the sum paid for duty or penalty falls short of what, according to the decision of the High Court, ought to have been paid, the deficie[illegible] of duty, or penalty, or both, shall be paid by th[illegible]llant, and the Collector may enforce the pa[illegible]hereof accordingly as if it were arrears of [illegible]venue.

Revision of Collector's orders.

38. All orders of the Collector under this Act, except such as are passed under Section thirty-six, shall be open to revision on appeal or otherwise by the chief controlling revenue authority to which the Collector is subordinate.

Reference to High Court.

39. The chief controlling revenue authority may refer to the High Court any question arising in a case coming before such authority on appeal or otherwise as to the proper stamp prescribed by this Act for any instrument, stating specially the case on which the question arose.

Cases so referred shall be heard by three Judges of the High Court and shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority of such Judges, and such decision shall be final as to the duty to be charged on such instrument.

Power to remit or mitigate penalties.

40. The chief controlling revenue authority may, upon petition, remit or mitigate any penalty imposed under this Act.

Institution of prosecutions.

41. All prosecutions in respect of any offence punishable by this Act, shall be instituted by the Collector of the District, or such other officer as the Local Government specially authorizes in that behalf.

Jurisdiction of Magistrate.

42. Offences punishable under this Act may be tried by any Magistrate who would, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, have jurisdiction to try offences for which penalties corresponding with those hereinbefore provided are provided by the Indian Penal Code.

CHAPTER VI.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Refund in case of useless or spoiled stamped paper.

43. If any person who has obtained any stamped paper in the manner allowed by this Act or Act No. X of 1862 (to consolidate and amend the Law relating to Stamp Duties), does not require the same for use, or if the paper so obtained becomes spoiled or unfit for use as hereinafter mentioned, the Collector of the District in which the paper has been purchased may, upon application made to him within one year after such purchase, and upon delivery to him of such paper, refund the amount actually paid for the same, or in case the owner of the paper so spoiled or unfit for use, desires to be supplied with stamped paper of similar or equal value, the Collector may cause such paper to be delivered to him or his agent upon payment of the value of the paper on which the new stamp or stamps shall be impressed.

When stamped paper shall be held to be spoiled.

44. Stamped paper shall be held to be spoiled or unfit for use within the meaning of section forty-three when

By accident happening to the same before any writing thereupon has been finally signed and executed, it is rendered unfit for use;

Or when, because of some error in the drawing up or copying of any writing thereon discovered before such writing has been finally signed and executed, it is rendered of no avail;

Or when, by reason of death or refusal of the party whose signature may be necessary to effect the transaction intended by such writing, it remains incomplete and of no avail;

Or when, by refusal of any office or trust granted by a writing thereon, it has failed of the purpose intended;

Or when, by reason of failure of consideration, the transaction intended to be effected or evidenced by a writing thereon cannot be effected or evidenced;

Or when the transaction intended to be effected by a writing thereon has been effected by some other instrument duly stamped;

Or when, in the case of a negotiable instrument, such instrument is, by reason of non-delivery to the payee or person acting in his behalf, or other cause, never brought into use;

Or when, in the case of a bill of exchange other than a bill drawn in a set, it has not been presented for acceptance.

Suit where consideration is not stated.

45. Where in case of a sale, or an exchange upon which money is paid for equality of exchange, or a lease for a premium, the full consideration-money is not truly set forth in the manner hereby directed, it shall be lawful for the purchaser, or the person paying money for equality of exchange, or the lessee (as the case may be), or his representative in interest to sue for and recover back from the seller, or the person receiving such money, or the lessor (as the case may be), or his representative in interest, so much of the consideration-money as is not set forth as aforesaid, or the whole thereof, if no part of the same is so set forth; and in such suit, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, the conveyance, instrument of exchange, or lease shall be receivable in evidence.

Power to make rules for sale of stamps.

46. Every Local Government shall frame rules for regulating the sale of stamps and stamped paper required by this Act, for determining the persons by whom such sale is to be conducted, and for fixing the remuneration of such persons within the territories subject to its control; and may from time to time alter and add to such rules.

Such rules, alterations and additions shall, when approved by the Governor General of India in Council, and after publication in the local official Gazette, have the force of law.

Supply of stamps and stamped paper.

47. Every Local Government shall cause a sufficient supply of adhesive stamps and stamped papers of the several denominations specified in Schedule V to this Act to be provided and kept for sale at all convenient places within the territories subject to its control.

Employment of single stamp.

48. The amount of any stamp required by this Act shall be denoted by a single stamp, except when such amount exceeds one thousand rupees, in which case it may be denoted by two or more stamps, the aggregate amount of which shall be the amount so required:

Provided that where a single stamped paper for any amount less than one thousand rupees is procurable on application to the proper officer, it shall be lawful, on such officer making a certificate to that effect, for the person requiring such paper to denote the amount by two or more stamps, the aggregate amount of which shall be the amount so required.

Employment of several stamped papers.

49. When more stamped papers than one are used, under the former part of section forty-eight, for an instrument chargeable with stamp duty under this Act, each stamped paper so used shall contain a part of the instrument.

Act to be translated, indexed and sold cheaply.

50. Every Local Government shall cause this Act and the schedules hereto annexed to be carefully translated into the principal vernacular languages of the territories subject to its control. A full alphabetical index shall be added to every such translation, and the translation and index shall be printed and sold to the public at a price not exceeding four annas per copy.

Statement of Objects and Reasons.

The generally admitted defect of the existing Stamp Law, Act X of 1862, is the very imperfect arrangement of its provisions, especially in regard to the subject-matter of Schedule A., which is so complicated that the requirements of the law are frequently ill-understood by its administrators, whilst to the mass of persons whose entire business transactions are so materially affected by it, those requirements are for the most part wholly unintelligible.

The primary result of this state of the law is a loss of revenue through evasion of the Stamp Duty, and this evasion is in some degree fostered by the tendency of the administrators of the law, from the reasons above stated, to presume as the cause of under-stamping ignorance of what the law requires rather than a wilful attempt to defraud the revenue.

The infrequency of criminal prosecutions for breaches of the Stamp Law may be also partly ascribed to the somewhat conflicting provisions of the existing law in regard to penalties and the imperfect procedure for their enforcement, which results from the withdrawal by Act XXXVI of 1860 of the power of impounding unstamped documents, a power which, prior to the passing of that enactment, obtained in Bengal under Regulation X of 1829.

The main desideratum, therefore, in any amendment of the existing Stamp Law is its simplification, and the chief object of the present Bill is so to express and re-arrange the provisions of that law as to render them generally intelligible, and to enable persons whose transactions involve the execution of instruments liable to stamp-duty, to ascertain, without difficulty, what amount of stamp such instruments must bear to secure their validity.

For this purpose, the provisions of the Bill have been arranged in chapters, each chapter treating of a distinct branch of the subject: all instruments chargeable with stamp duty have been classed according to the amount of duty to which they are severally liable: the exemptions and all other enacting matter have been placed in the body of the Bill; and an interpretation clause, embracing every denomination of instruments specified in the schedules, has been supplied. The interpretations attempt a generic description of the documents which each denomination is intended to include rather than a definition of the denomination specified, as such a description is better calculated to explain the requirements of the law. Provision has been made also for the preparation by each Local Government of a well-authenticated translation into the principal vernacular languages of the territories subject to its control.

The Bill also aims at obviating the ambiguity of the provisions of the existing law in regard to the action of the courts and public officers before whom unstamped or insufficiently stamped documents are produced. It empowers the Civil and Criminal Courts to impound all unstamped and insufficiently stamped instruments coming before them, with a view to the criminal prosecution of the executants, when the proper stamp duty appears to have been fraudulently evaded: it provides for the impounding and transmission to the Collectors of all unstamped or insufficiently stamped documents produced before any registering or other public officer; and it prescribes the procedure to be followed by the Collector in the case of such documents so transmitted or otherwise brought before him.

The Bill does not contemplate the acquisition of increased revenue by any general enhancement of the now prevailing rates of stamp duty, but advantage has been taken of the opportunity afforded by the revision of Schedule A. to adjust the gradations of the ad valorem duties chargeable on bonds and conveyances on a scale of uniform percentage in accordance with the English system. The number of classes of ad valorem duties contained in Schedule A. has been reduced from five to three, instruments of partition being classed with conveyances, and leases, if for an indefinite period or for a term exceeding one year being charged as conveyances, and if for less than one year being made liable to the same duty as bonds. The effect of these modifications is a reduction of the rates now chargeable, on bonds for a less amount than Rs. 10,000, and on conveyances, when the amount involved does not exceed Rs. 15,000, and a considerable enhancement of the rates on bonds and conveyances for any higher amount; But as the vast majority of bonds and conveyances executed in this country involve an amount less than the sums above-mentioned, the net result of the change is presumably in favour of the tax payer.

By Section 19, Act X of 1862, provision is made on the payment of a fee of Rs. 10 for the adjudication by the chief controlling revenue authority of doubts as to the proper stamp to be borne by any instrument. Owing probably to the excessive amount of the fee, and the delay and inconvenience caused by the required reference to such distant authority, this provision is practically inoperative. The Bill proposes to make the Collector the adjudicating authority, to reduce the fee to Rs. 5, and to allow an appeal or reference to the High Court from the decision of the Collector on the further payment of a fee of Rs. 20—to be refunded to the appellant in the event of the Collector's decision being reversed. The procedure will thus be assimilated to that obtaining under the English law.

The Civil penalty leviable under Act X of 1862, for the validation of an instrument executed on unstamped or insufficiently stamped paper, varies greatly according to the time which may have elapsed from the execution of such instrument until it is brought to the Collector; whilst the period within which the penalty may be remitted on the ground of unavoidable accident, is practically unlimited. Such distinctions are purely arbitrary, and not recognized by the English law. The only limit which the English law prescribes as to after-stamping is in regard to instruments executed through any unavoidable cause on paper not bearing the proper stamp. Any such instruments, to obtain a remission of the penalty incurred, must be brought to the Revenue Officer within one year from the date of their execution. Following this course, the Bill provides for the remission of the penalty in such cases, when the unstamped instrument is brought to the Collector or (to any other public officer by whom it is transmitted to the Collector) within one year from the date of its execution, and in all other cases constitutes that period the sole ground of distinction in regard to the amount of fine to be levied: the penalty on instruments brought within one year, being fixed at ten times, and if brought after that period, at twenty times, the deficient amount of stamp duty chargeable thereon.

The provisions of Section 29, Act X of 1862, in regard to the cost of the stamp on certain instruments have been extended. The obligation of bearing the expense of supplying the stamp is fixed by the Bill, in the case of all instruments specified in the first, second, and third schedules, in accordance with the English practice on this subject.

The appellate jurisdiction of the chief controlling revenue authority is extended by the Bill to the revision of all orders passed by the Collector. With the view of obtaining from time to time an authoritative construction of the law for the guidance of the courts and public officers concerned in its administration, the Bill also provides for references being made to the High Court by the chief controlling revenue authority.

In lieu of the existing provisions of the law regarding the sale of stamps, the Bill proposes to invest the Local Governments with the power of framing rules for the regulation of such sale. It is almost impossible to devise a single set of rules suitable to the circumstances of all the provinces of British India, and separate systems adapted to the provinces subject to each Local Government, are better calculated to have successful operation.

The Bill proposes to impose fixed stamp duties of small amount on certain instruments which are stamped under the Englsh law, but have hitherto escaped the impost when executed in this country. It provides also for the reduction of the stamp duty now charged on instruments evidencing the gift or exchange of immoveable property, and the re-conveyance of mortgaged property, or the release of an equity of redemption, instruments of co-partnership, proxies and copies of documents; and it slightly enhances the rates on bills of exchange of large amount, and the fixed duty on a general power-of-attorney.

It further imposes penalties on a legal practitioner who inserts in a conveyance an amount of consideration less than that actually given. This provision is in modification of the second clause of section 51, Act X of 1862, and in accordance with the English law on the subject.

In accordance also with the provision of the English statute 48 Geo. III, c. 149, s. 24, purchasers are empowered to recover from the vendors any amount paid for the property purchased by them in excess of the amount stated in the instrument of conveyance.

The present Bill relates only to that branch of stamp duties comprised in Schedule A., Act X of 1862. The subject of stamp duties on judicial proceedings, which are of the natured of Court fees, is reserved for separate legislation.

A Bill to facilitate the improvement of land in the North-Western Provinces.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to facilitate the improvement of land in the North-Western Provinces of the Presidency of Fort William; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preliminary.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called "The Land Improvement (North-Western Provinces) Act, 1869."

Interpretation clause.

2. In this Act—

"Rent" means whatever is payable or deliverable for the use or occupation of land:

"Landlord" means any person entitled to receive rent:

"Tenant" means any person using or occupying land, and liable to pay or deliver rent therefor; and

"Court" means the Court of the Collector of Land Revenue or the Court of any officer authorized by the Local Government to hear cases under this Act.

Extent of Act.

3. This Act extends only to the territories for the time being subject to the government of the Lieutenant Governor of the said Provinces:

Saving of agreements.

And nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any special agreement which has been, or shall be, made between a landlord and a tenant in regard to any of the matters herein comprised.

Cultivation and Management.

Cultivation and management of holding.

4. Every tenant shall cultivate and manage the land in his occupation in a good and husbandlike manner, according to the custom of the country in reference to lands of a like nature, except so far as such custom is varied by this Act, so that the land shall not be injured or deteriorated, or its annual letting-value diminished.

Planting Trees.

By tenant without right of occupancy.

5. No tenant not having a right of occupancy shall be entitled, without the landlord's previous consent, to plant any timber trees on the land in his occupation.

By tenant with right of occupancy.

6. A tenant having a right of occupancy may plant such trees without the landlord's previous consent. But the rent payable by such tenant for the land so planted shall not be liable to be reduced below the rent which would be payable for such land if it were used for agricultural purposes, and shall be liable to enhancement in the same manner as if the land had continued to be so used.

Suits against Tenants.

Suits for compensation or to eject.

7. A landlord may bring a suit to recover compensation from a tenant for any breach of the rules contained in sections three, four, five and six; or, if the tenant has not a right of occupancy, to eject him from the land in his occupation.

When the plaintiff succeeds in any such suit for ejectment, the Court [illegible] of making a decree for ejectment, award to the plaintiff such compensation (to be paid by the defendant) as it thinks fit on account of the breach complained of.

Effect of unsatisfied decree for compensation.

8. If a decree for compensation made under section seven remains unsatisfied for fifteen days or upwards, such decree shall, in regard to the liability of the tenant to have his lease cancelled, or to be ejected from the land in his occupation, have the same effect as if an arrear of rent were due from the tenant in respect of such land.

Tenants' Improvements.

Improvements not to involve cancellation or ejectment.

9. No tenant shall be liable to have his lease cancelled, or to be ejected from the land in his occupation, merely on account of improvements made by him on such land.

Presumption of ownership.

10. No improvements made, whether with or without the landlord's consent, by a tenant on the land in his occupation, shall be deemed to raise any presumption of the tenant's ownership in such land or any part thereof.

Power to make improvements.

11. Any tenant may, with or without the landlord's previous consent, make any such improvements on the land in his occupation as are hereinafter mentioned.

Compensation for Tenants' improvements.

Compensation for tenant's improvements.

12. If the tenant has not a right of occupancy, and his tenancy is determined by effluxion of time, or by the act of the landlord; or, if the tenant has a right of occupancy, and the landlord institutes a suit to eject him from the land in his occupation, or to enhance the rent thereof, the tenant, or his representative, as the case may be, shall be entitled to compensation for the outlay in money or labour, or both, expended in making such improvements by him or the person from whom he has inherited, or whom he represents, within thirty years next before the date of such determination or institution.

"Improvements" defined.

13. The word "improvements," as used in the last preceding section, means works by which the annual letting-value of the land has been, and, at the time of demanding compensation, continues to be, increased, and comprises,—

1st.—The construction of works for the storage of water, for the supply of water for agricultural purposes, for drainage, and for protection against floods; the construction of wells, the reclaiming, clearing and enclosing of waste lands and jungles, and other works of a like nature;

2nd.—The renewal or reconstruction of any of the foregoing works, or such alterations therein or additions thereto as are not required for maintaining the same, and which increase durably their value.

14. Such compensation may, at the option of the landlord or his representative, be made,—

Compensation how made.

(1.)—By payment in money;

(2.)—By the grant of a beneficial lease of the land by the landlord or his representative to the tenant or his representative; or

(3.)—Partly by payment in money, and partly by the grant of such lease as aforesaid.

15. If the landlord grants, and the tenant accepts, a lease of the land in the occupation of the latter for a term not less than thirty years, such lease shall bar any claim by the tenant or his representative in respect of improvements made before the commencement of the term on such land by the tenant or the person from whom he has inherited, or whom he represents.

Bar of claim to compensation.

16. If the landlord gives notice to the tenant in the manner provided by section eighteen, that he is willing that the land in such tenant's occupation shall continue to be held by him or his representative for a term of not less than thirty years, at the annual rent then paid by the tenant, and if, within three months after the service of such notice, the tenant does not give notice, in the manner provided under the same section, of his willingness to accept such lease, he shall be debarred from making any claim for improvements made by him on such land whether before or after the expiration of the said three months.

Effect of offer to continue tenant in his holding.

17. When the landlord determines the tenancy of any tenant not having a right of occupancy, or institutes a suit to eject or to enhance the rent of any tenant having a right of occupancy, the tenant or his representative desiring to claim compensation for any improvements, may, within three months after the date of such determination or institution serve upon the landlord in the manner provided in section eighteen, a notice claiming such compensation and specifying the nature and date of the making of such improvements, and the amount to which he claims to be entitled for such compensation.

Notice claiming compensation.

18. On the landlord or the tenant (as the case may be) applying to the Tahsildár or other officer authorised by the local Government to serve notices under this Act, such officer shall serve any notice mentioned in section sixteen or section seventeen, and the applicant shall pay the costs of service.

Service of notices.

The notice shall, if practicable, be served personally on the tenant or the landlord (as the case may be).

But if he cannot be found, service may be made by affixing the notice at his usual place of residence, or if he does not reside in the District wherein the land is situate, at some conspicuous place in the village wherein the land is situate.

19. In case of difference as to the amount or value of the compensation tendered, either party may present an application to the Court, on a paper bearing a stamp of eight annas, stating the matter in dispute and requesting a determination thereof.

Provision for difference as to amount or value of compensation.

On receiving such application, the Court shal cause notice thereof to be served on the other party, and after taking such evidence as the parties or either of them may adduce, and after such further enquiry (if any) as it may deem necessary, determine (as the case may be) the amount of the payment, or the terms of the lease, or both.

In determining such amount or terms, the Court shall take into account any assistance given by the landlord, either directly in money, material or labour, at the time of making such improvements, or indirectly by subsequently allowing the tenant to hold at a rate of rent more favourable than the rate at which he would otherwise have held, and any deterioration or diminution of the value of any part of the land in the occupation of the tenant caused by bad cultivation, or by his neglect or default.

The provisions of Chapter VI (as to reference to arbitration) of the Code of Civil Procedure shall be applicable to the proceedings on every such application, and every such application shall be deemed to be a suit for the purposes of the said chapter, and of section nine of Act No. XXIII of 1861 (to amend Act VIII of 1859).

20. If at the time when an award of compensation is made under section nineteen, or in case there shall have been no difference between the parties as to the amount of the compensation, at the time at which such amount was agreed upon, the tenant shall be entitled to retain such occupation upon the terms of his tenancy until the amount of such compensation, after deducting therefrom any rent due shall be paid, or secured to his satisfaction.

Retention of land till compensation paid.

Procedure.

21. Subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, all suits and applications under this Act shall be regulated by the rules of procedure by which suits and applications relating to the recovery of rent are for the time being regulated in the said Provinces, and all judgments and orders given by the Courts under the Act shall be appealable in accordance with the said rules.

Procedure.

Appeals.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

By a decision of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, dated the 20th July 1867, in the case of Behare Patuck v. Sheobaluk Singh, it has been declared to be the general law of the North-Western Provinces that a tenant, even though he possess a right of occupancy, is liable to ejectment from his holding if he should dig a kachcha well, or plant trees, without the previous consent of the landlord. Although the High Court felt that, in the present state of the law, it could arrive at no other conclusion, it may be presumed, from the terms of its decision, that it had grave doubts in regard to the reasonableness of the law which it was administering. The Court said,—

"The law may or may not be opposed to good policy. The act of digging a well, or planting a tree, does not necessarily imply or assert a proprietary right in the land in which the well is dug, or the tree planted. Whether it is most expedient that the tenant should be encouraged to improve his holding by all means, or that the benefits resulting from certain modes of improvement should be secured to the landlord, or left to his option, may be a question; but it is one which we are not called upon to consider. The Court must recognize the law as it is found to exist, so long as it shall not be superseded by positive law, and must apply it in all cases not governed by local usages or special contract. So also in respect of the penalty incurred by a tenant who is guilty of a breach of contract of the kind which this case brings to our notice, the unwritten law of the country must be our guide. Were we free to legislate on the subject, it might seem to us equitable and expedient to look to the amount of injury actually caused to the landlord by the act complained of, and to grant him relief and compensation, whenever possible, otherwise than by ejectment of the tenant. But it is not contended or proved that any other penalty than forfeiture of his holding for such a breach of contract, is sanctioned by the law of these Provinces."

In another decision dated the 15th of April 1867, in the case of Tej Singh v. Rám Dás, Ganéshi Singh, and Chéd Mal, the High Court, while holding itself bound by the existing law to rule that a tenant with a right of occupancy is liable to ejectment if he plant trees without his landlord's permission, has shown very clearly by its remarks that it considers the law to require amendment. The Court said,—

"Whether it is fairly done in furtherance of the purpose for which he holds the land (that is, its cultivation in the usual manner of the country), or so as in no way to detract from that purpose, would seem to be within the ryot's power. We should have been inclined to hold that the planting of trees without the landlord's consent on an in considerable portion of the holding, and to such a limited extent as not to withdraw from cultivation any substantial part of the land, was not an act beyond the ryot's power, or if strictly beyond his power, that it was not an act to be followed by a forfeiture of the whole holding."

The Board of Revenue, North-Western Provinces, has stated its apprehensions that the effect of the law which has been declared by the High Court, in the first of the decisions just noticed, may "in many districts place the cultivator at the mercy of the zamíndárs, as, in some parts of these Provinces, the annual sinking of a kachcha well is believed to be as essential to the production of a crop as the cultivation of the ground by the plough."

It may be noticed, however, that the judgment of the High Court indicates by the reference made to local usage, that the annual sinking of such wells is not dependent on the zamíndár's previous consent.

The Government of the North-Western Provinces considers that, under the circumstances, legislation is necessary, and this conclusion appears unavoidable. Whatever view be taken of the economical advantages or disadvantages of Rights of Occupancy in land, it must be admitted that when such rights have been recognized by law, they constitute rights of property which ought to be protected by law like any other rights. A kachcha well is often a mere hole in the ground, a few feet deep, made at the cost of a few rupees, and, as stated by the Board of Revenue, it is very commonly impossible without such wells to obtain any crop at all. It is clearly not reasonable that, in consequence of the performance of acts which are essential to the proper cultivation of the land, a tenant should be liable to ejectment from his holding and to forfeiture of his property.

Legislation having thus, in the opinion of the Local Government, and of the Board of Revenue, and it may be presumed, of the High Court also, become urgently necessary, it is thought desirable to take the opportunity of generally assimilating the law of the North-Western Provinces, in respect to tenants' improvements, to the laws lately passed for the neighbouring Provinces of Oudh and the Panjáb. Provisions have been added for the better protection of the landlord. While the Bill authorizes the tenant to make certain improvements on the land in his occupation, and enables him, under certain circumstances, to claim compensation for the outlay incurred by him in making them, it also gives to the landlord a remedy against the tenant, in case of injury being done to the land by bad cultivation or otherwise, and provides that the making of improvements shall raise no presumption, in favour of the tenant, of any right of property in the land.

Following the suggestion contained in the decision of the High Court, above quoted, the Bill enables the Courts to give equitable relief and compensation to the landlord for injury actually caused by the tenant to the land, without necessarily, in every case, inflicting on the tenant the extreme penalty of ejectment from his holding.

The provisions regarding the manner in which compensation for tenants' improvements may be claimed and awarded, are, in principle, identical with the provisions which have already received the sanction of the Legislature, in the Oudh Rent Act and in the Panjáb Tenancy Act, and it is therefore not thought necessary to notice them in detail. In regard to compensation for improvements, the Bill will only come into operation in the absence of any agreement between the landlord and tenant, and it will not interfere with their power to enter into any special contract that they think fit.

A Bill to Consolidate and amend the Articles War for the government of Her Majesty's Native Indian Forces.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the Articles of War for the government of the Native Officers, Soldiers and other persons in Her Majesty's Indian Army; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

PART I.—PRELIMINARY.

(a).—Short Title.

This Act may be called "The Indian Articles of War."

(b).—Commencement of Act.

This Act shall come into operation on the first day of March 1869.

(c).—Repeal of Acts.

From such day Act No. XXIX of 1861 (to consolidate and amend the Articles of War for the government of the Native Officers and Soldiers in Her Majesty's Indian Army), Act No. V of 1863 (to amend Act XXIX of 1861), and Act No. XXVI of 1865 (to amend Act XXIX of 1861) shall be repealed:

Provided that all crimes and offences committed against any Articles of War repealed by this Act may be enquired into and punished in like manner as if they had been committed against the Articles of War contained in this Act, and that any warrant for holding Courts Martial, issued under any Act hereby repealed, shall remain in full force, notwithstanding such repeal:

Provided also, that no proceedings in any trial begun under any Articles so repealed, shall be discontinued owing to such repeal, but every such trial shall proceed and be completed in the same manner as if this Act had not been passed.

(d).—Application of Articles.

The Articles contained in Part II of this Act shall apply to all

Commissioned Officers,
Sub-Assistant Surgeons,
Hospital Assistants,
Native Doctors,
Warrant Officers,
Non-Commissioned Officers,
Hospital Attendants of any class,
Trumpeters, Buglers, Drummers,
Musicians,
Soldiers,
Unattested Recruits,
Lascars, Mahouts, Drivers,
Farriers, Syces, Grass-cutters,
Artificers, Labourers,
Sutlers, Followers whether public or private, and all other persons attached to or serving with any portion of the said Army:

Proviso.

Provided that nothing in the said Part (other than Article 123) shall render any British-born subject of Her Majesty, or any legitimate Christian lineal descendant of such subject, whether in the paternal or maternal line, triable or punishable under the said Part, but all such persons belonging to Her Majesty's Indian Army shall be triable and punishable as if they belonged to Her Majesty's Indian Army.

And that nothing in the said Part shall render any American or any Christian European not being British-born, or any Christian legitimate lineal descendant of such American or European, whether in the paternal or maternal line, triable by a Court Martial composed of Native Commissioned Officers; but all such persons belonging to Her Majesty's Indian Army shall be triable by Courts Martial composed of European Officers only. Save as aforesaid, such persons shall be subject to this Act as if they were Natives of British India.

(e).—Interpretation-clause.

In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—

"Army" means Her Majesty's Indian Army and "service" means service in such Army:

"Commissioned Officer" includes all Officers holding Commissions in the Native ranks of the Army, whether they be of purely Native or of a mixed European and Native extraction:

"European Officers" includes all European Officers holding commissions in such Army or in Her Majesty's British Army:

"Commanding Officer" means the European Officer in actual command for the time being of any Force, Division, District, Regiment, Corps, Detachment, or Depôt, as the case may be:

"Judge Advocate" includes any European Officer duly authorised to officiate as Judge Advocate:

"Court Martial" means a Court Martial held under this Act:

"Soldier" and "Soldiers" include Non-Commissioned Officers and all armed persons doing duty in the ranks of the Army:

"Attested" means attested under the Articles contained in Part II of this Act:

"Deserter" means a person subject to such Articles, who has deserted from the Army:

"Government" means in the case of the Madras Army, the Governor of Fort Saint George in Council, in the case of the Bombay Army, the Governor of Bombay in Council, and in the case of any other part of Her Majesty's Indian Army, the Governor General of India in Council;

And the expressions "assault," "criminal force," "dishonestly," "extortion," "fraudulently," "grievous hurt," "hurt," "voluntarily causes hurt," "voluntarily causes grievous hurt" and "reason to believe" shall be severally taken to have the meanings assigned to them respectively in the Indian Penal Code, and quoted in Part I of the Appendix to this Act.

(f).—Saving of certain Regulations.

Nothing in this Act affects any regulations by which the respective offices and powers of Cantonment Magistrates, Commissariat Officers, Officers in charge of the Police in Cantonments, and Superintendents of Military Bázárs are defined and controlled, or by which Panchâyats are constituted and guided.

PART II.—THE ARTICLES OF WAR.

TITLE I.—Enlistment, Dismissal and Discharge.

"I , inhabitant of ,
"son of , solemnly affirm in the "presence of Almighty God that I will be faith"ful to Her Majesty the Queen, and will go
"wherever I am ordered, by land or sea, and will "obey all commands of the Officers set over me,
"even to the peril of my life."

or

In lieu of affirming, men of the Sikh religion, shall make oath as follows:—

"I, , inhabitant of
"son of , swear by the Guru Granth
"Sáhib Jí, and if I tell a falsehood may the "Guru Granth Sáhib cause misfortune to de"scend upon me, that I will be faithful to Her "Majesty the Queen, and will go wherever I am "ordered, by land or sea, and will obey all com"mands of the Officers set over me, even to the "peril of my life."

(c).—By any Officer authorized to appoint Detachment General Courts Martial by warrant of the Commander-in-Chief in India, or of the Commander-in-Chief of a Presidency; and when any portion of Her Majesty's troops is serving in any place not in British India, and not within the dominions of the Princes and States of India in alliance with Her Majesty, wherein Her Majesty's forces are permanently stationed, by the Officer in actual command of such troops, upon complaint being made to him of an offence against the person or property of any resident of such place, committed by any person under such Officer's command and subject to these Articles.

Its Composition and Powers.

Article 78.—Such Court Martial shall consist of not less than three Commissioned Officers, and shall have the same powers as a General Court Martial.

(3).—District Court Martial and (4).—Garrison Court Martial.

Appointment of such Courts.

Appointment of District Court Martial.

Article 79.—A District or Garrison Court Martial may be appointed—

(a).—By the Commander-in-Chief in India:

(b).—By the Commander-in-Chief of any Presidency:

(c).—By any Officer authorized to appoint District or Garrison Courts Martial (as the case may be) by warrant of the Commander-in-Chief in India, or the Commander-in-Chief of any Presidency:

(d).—By any Officer in actual command of Native troops authorized to appoint District or Garrison Courts Martial (as the case may be) by order of the Governor General of India in Council, the Governor of Fort St. George in Council, or the Governor of Bombay in Council:

(e).—By any Officer commanding Native troops not attached to the forces of a Presidency authorized to appoint District or Garrison Courts Martial (as the case may be) by warrant which the Governor General of India in Council has empowered the Commander-in-Chief in India to issue.

Composition of such Courts.

Article 80.—(a). Except as hereinafter provided, a District or Garrison Court Martial shall consist of seven Commissioned Officers, unless that number cannot conveniently be assembled, in which case such Court may consist of not less than five such Officers.

(b). A District Court Martial appointed under the authority of an order in Council, may consist of any number of Commissioned Officers not less than three; and may, if so provided in the order, be composed either of European or of Native Commissioned Officers at the discretion of the Officer appointing it.

Officers composing such Courts.

Article 81.—A District or Garrison Court Martial may, when necessary, be composed wholly of Officers of the regiment or corps to which the accused belongs: Provided that on the trial of a Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Hospital Assistant, Native Doctor or Warrant Officer, not more than two Officers of the same regiment, corps, detachment, depôt or department as the accused shall sit upon any such Court.

Powers of such Courts.

Article 82.—A District or Garrison Court Martial shall have power to try all persons subject to these Articles, other than Commissioned Officers, for any offence other than mutiny made punishable by these Articles, and to pass sentences of—

Imprisonment (with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement) for a term not exceeding one year,

Dismissal from the service,
Suspension from rank, pay and allowances,
Degradation,
Loss of standing,
Reduction to the ranks,
Corporal punishment not exceeding fifty lashes,
Forfeiture of additional pay, good-conduct pay and claim to pension,
Forfeiture of arrears of pay and allowances,
Stoppages.

(5).—Regimental Court Martial.

Appointment of such Courts.

Article 83.—A Regimental Court Martial may be appointed by the Officer commanding any regiment or corps.

Composition of such Court.

Article 84.—A Regimental Court Martial shall consist of not less than five Commissioned Officers, unless that number cannot conveniently be assembled, in which case such Court may consist of not less than three such Officers.

Powers of such Court.

Article 85.—A Regimental Court Martial shall have power to try—

(a).—All persons subject to these Articles, other than Commissioned Officers, Sub-Assistant Surgeons, Hospital Assistants, Native Doctors and Warrant Officers, for any offence other than mutiny, desertion or disgraceful conduct, punishable under these Articles, when committed on the line of march, or on board any vessel.

(b).—Any offence punishable under this Act, and not within the ordinary jurisdiction of a Regimental Court Martial, other than mutiny, desertion and disgraceful conduct, when the Officer commanding the Division or District directs it to be tried by a Regimental Court Martial; and

(c).—Any offence punishable under these Articles, other than offences not within the ordinary jurisdiction of a Regimental Court Martial—and to pass sentences of—Dismissal,

Loss of standing,
Reduction to the ranks,
Imprisonment (with or without hard labour and with or without solitary confinement) for a term not exceeding six months,
Corporal punishment not exceeding fifty lashes,
Forfeiture of arrears of pay and allowances,
Stoppages.

(6).—Regimental Detachment Court Martial, and

(7).—Detachment Courts Martial

Appointment of Regimental Detachment Courts Martial.

Article 86.—A Regimental Detachment Court Martial may be appointed by the Officer commanding a detachment of his own regiment or corps:

Appointment of Detachment Court Martial.

Article 87.—A Detachment Court Martial may be appointed,—

(a).—By the Officer commanding any Station, Force or Detachment of men of different regiments or corps;

(b).—By the Officer in command of any detachment when any offence not within the ordinary jurisdiction of a Regimental Court Martial (other than mutiny, desertion, or disgraceful conduct), is committed on the line of march, or on board any vessel.

Composition of such Courts.

Article 88.—A Regimental Detachment Court Martial and a Detachment Court Martial shall consist of not less than five Commissioned Officers, unless that number cannot conveniently be assembled, in which case such Court may consist of not less than three Commissioned Officers.

Powers of such Courts.

Article 89.—A Regimental Detachment Court Martial and a Detachment Court Martial shall have the same powers as a Regimental Court Martial.

(8).—Summary Courts Martial.

Article 90. (a).—Subject to the provisions and restrictions contained in Articles 91, 92, 93, 94, 125 and 126, a Summary Court Martial may be held by the European Commissioned Officer who is in actual command, for the time being, of any regiment or corps, or of any detachment consisting of, or equivalent in strength to, three troops or companies, or of any European corps or detachment to which Native details subject to these Articles are attached, or who is in charge of any arsenal, ordnance establishment, or camp equipage depôt.

(b).—In detached situations, beyond sea, or out of British India, or on service in the field, or under any circumstances where immediate example being necessary, a Detachment Court Martial cannot be assembled as provided in Article 87, and reference cannot be made to superior authority without detriment to the service, a Summary Court Martial may be held by the European Commissioned Officer commanding a detachment of any strength:

Provided that if the Officer is of less than five years' standing, he shall not carry into effect any sentence by such Court Martial, until it has received the approval of the nearest superior Military Officer holding a command of not less than a regiment.

Constitution of such Courts.

Article 91.—At every Summary Court Martial, the Commanding Officer holding it shall alone constitute the Court.

Persons triable by such Court.

Article 92.—No Commanding Officer shall have power to try by a Summary Court Martial any Commissioned Officer, Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Hospital Assistant, Native Doctor, or Warrant Officer, or any person who is not liable to trial by Courts composed of Native Commissioned Officers; but all other persons subject to these Articles shall be liable to trial and punishment by a Summary Court Martial:

Provided that no person shall be so tried unless he is under the command of the Officer holding the trial.

Offences triable by such Court.

Article 93.—Any offence against these Articles, except mutiny, may be tried and punished by Summary Court Martial:

Provided that, when there is no emergent reason for immediate action, and reference can, without detriment to discipline, be made to superior military authority, a Commanding Officer shall not try by Summary Court Martial, without such reference, any of the following offences:—

Offences under Articles 7 to 23 both inclusive, ordinarily punishable by General Court Martial only:

Disgraceful offences under Articles 54, 55, 56, 60, 61 and 64; and Offences by which such Commanding Officer is personally aggrieved.

Its powers.

Article 94.—A Summary Court Martial held by any Officer Commanding a regiment or corps may award any sentence not exceeding that awardable by a District Court Martial.

A Summary Court Martial held by any Commanding Officer other than the Officer Commanding a regiment or corps, may award any sentence not exceeding that awardable by a Regimental or Detachment Court Martial.

Trial of grave offences by inferior Courts.

Article 95.—Save as provided in Articles 73, 77, 79, 83, and 86, no Commanding Officer shall try by a Regimental or Detachment Court Martial offences which are by these Articles declared to be punishable by a General, District or Garrison Court Martial only. But, as it may be expedient that some such offences should be tried by inferior Courts Martial, the Commanding Officer of any Regiment, Corps or Detachment shall, in every such instance, submit the case for the orders of the Officer Commanding the Division or District in which he is serving, and the Officer Commanding such Division or District, whether on or without such application, may direct trial by such kind of Court Martial as he thinks fit:

Provided that mutiny shall in no case be tried save by a General Court Martial, and that desertion and disgraceful conduct shall in no case be tried by any Court Martial inferior to a District or Garrison Court Martial.

The permission to try grave offences by District or Garrison, Regimental or Detachment Courts Martial, shall be entered upon the proceedings of such Court, and in the monthly return of trials furnished to Army Head Quarters.

Courts composed of European Officers.

Article 96.—The Governor General of India, or the Governor of any Presidency, may, by an order in Council, direct that any Court Martial appointed under these Articles, shall be composed of European instead of Native Commissioned Officers, or authorize any General or other Officer to appoint Courts Martial so composed at his discretion.

Any such Court Martial shall in such case be constituted accordingly, but shall in all other respects be governed by these Articles.

Claim to be tried by European Officers.

Article 97.—With the exception of cases of trial by Courts Martial appointed under orders in Council, every person subject to these Articles, who is under orders for trial by Court Martial, may claim to be tried by European Officers.

When any such claim is made, the Court, whether a General, District, Garrison, Regimental, or Detachment Court Martial, shall be composed of European instead of Native Commissioned Officers; but shall in all other respects be governed by these Articles.

CHAPTER II.—Procedure.

Limitation of trials.

Article 98.—No person subject to these Articles shall be tried or punished by a Court Martial for any military offence after the expiration of three years from the date of such offence, unless the offender, by reason of absence or of some other manifest impediment, could not be arrested or confined and brought to trial within that period; in which case he shall be liable to be tried at any time not exceeding two years after such impediment shall have ceased.

Place of trial.

Article 99.—Any person subject to these Articles who commits any offence against them, may be tried and punished for such offence in any place whatever in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in such place.

Arrest or confinement of accused.

Article 100.—Whenever any person subject to these Articles is accused of any military offence which his Commanding or other superior Officer considers should be tried by Court Martial, such Officer shall order the accused, if not below the rank of Non-Commissioned Officer, to be placed in arrest, or if below such rank, to be put in confinement, until he can be tried by a Court Martial or discharged by proper authority.

No such person shall be detained in arrest or confinement longer than is necessary for the purposes of justice.

Judge Advocate.

Article 101.—It shall not be necessary to appoint a Judge Advocate to any General Court Martial appointed under the authority of an Order in Council. But every other General Court Martial shall be attended by a Judge Advocate, who shall conduct the proceedings; and every District, or Garrison, Regimental, or Detachment Court Martial, composed of Native Commissioned Officers, shall be attended by an European Superintending Officer of not less than four years' service, who shall conduct the proceedings.

Interpreter.

Article 102.—An Interpreter shall be appointed to every Court Martial, and shall, when the Court is composed of Native Officers, form part of such Court.

If no duly qualified Interpreter is available at the station or place where the Court Martial sits, the Officer appointing the Court, or the Officer Commanding in the Division, District, or place within or at which the trial is to be held, shall appoint any competent person to perform the duty of Interpreter.

When no other qualified or competent person is available, the Superintending Officer, or, in the case of an European Court, the President, shall perform the duty of Interpreter.

No Interpreter shall as such have a vote upon any matter.

President.

Article 103.—At every Court Martial, whether composed of European or Native Commissioned Officers, the senior Officer shall sit as President, without special appointment as such.

In case of the death or unavoidable absence of the President, the next senior member shall take the place of President, without special appointment as such, and the trial shall proceed if the Court be still composed of the smallest number of members of which it is required by these Articles to consist.

Conduct of proceedings.

Article 104.—In the case of any General Court Martial appointed under an order in Council, or of any other Court Martial composed of European Commissioned Officers under Article 96 or 97, the President shall conduct the proceedings.

Precedence of Native Officers.

Article 105.—Risáldár Majors and Súbahdár Majors shall take precedence according to the dates of their commissions, and above all Súbahdárs or Risáldárs.

Sirdár Bahádurs and Bahádurs shall take rank only according to their respective commissions of Risáldár Major, Súbahdár Major, Risáldár, Risaidár, Súbahdár, or Jemadár.

Risáldárs shall take rank with Súbahdárs, according to the dates of their commissions as Risaidárs, or if they have not been Risaidárs, then according to the dates of their commissions as Risaldárs.

Time of trial, Adjournment and Re-assembly.

Article 106.—Trials by Courts Martial may be carried on at any time without restriction.

The date and hour of the Court's original assembly shall be fixed by, or under the orders of, the convening Officer; but the adjournment and re-assembly of a Court Martial shall be determined by the Court itself.

Challenges.

Article 107.—At all trials by Courts Martial, other than Courts Martial appointed under an order in Council or Summary Courts Martial, as soon as the Court is assembled, the names of the President and Members shall be read over to the prisoner, who shall thereupon be asked by the Officer conducting the proceedings, whether he objects to being tried by any Officer sitting on the Court.

If the prisoner objects to any such Officer, his objection and also the reply thereto of the Officer objected to, shall be heard and recorded, and the remaining Officers of the Court shall, in the absence of the challenged Officer, decide on the objection.

When no challenge is made, or when challenge has been made and disallowed, or the place of every Officer successfully challenged has been filled by another Officer to whom no objection is made or admitted, the Court shall proceed as hereinafter provided.

Interpreter's oath.

Article 108.—The Officer conducting the proceedings shall then administer to the Interpreter, or, when necessary, shall himself make as Interpreter, an affirmation or oath as follows:—

"I solemnly affirm, in the presence "of Almighty God, that I will faithfully interpret "and translate the proceedings of this Court; "and that I will not divulge the sentence until it "shall have been published by authority; and, "further, that I will not disclose or discover the "vote or opinion of any particular member of the "Court unless required to give evidence thereof "by a Court of Justice or Court Martial, in due "course of law."

When oath is made instead of affirmation, the oath shall commence—

"I do swear that I will faith- "fully interpret," &c., and shall be in all other respects in the above form, and shall end with the words, "So help me God."

Oaths of President and Members.

Article 109.—The Interpreter, or the Officer conducting the proceedings, shall then administer to the President and each of the Members of the Court Martial an affirmation or oath in such of the following forms as shall be appropriate:—

For European Officers.

"I solemnly affirm, in the pre- "sence of Almighty God, that I will duly admi- "nister justice, according to the Indian Articles of "War, without partiality, favour or affection; and "if any doubt shall arise, then, according to my "conscience, the best of my understanding, and the "custom of war in the like cases; and that I will "not divulge the sentence of the Court until it "shall be published by authority; and, further, "that I will not disclose or discover the vote or "opinion of any particular member of the Court, "unless required to give evidence thereof by a "Court of Justice or a Court Martial, in due "course of law."

When oath is made instead of affirmation, the oath shall commence—

"I do swear that I will duly "administer justice," &c., and shall be in all other respects in the above form, and shall end with the words "So help me God."

For Native Officers of the Mussulman or Hindú religion, or of any other religion for which it may be appropriate.

"I solemnly affirm, in the "presence of Almighty God, that I will duly administer justice, according to these Articles of "War, without partiality, favour or affection; and "if any doubt shall arise, then according to my "conscience, the best of my understanding, and "the custom of war in the like cases; and that "I will not divulge the sentence of the Court until "it shall be published by authority; and, further, "that I will not disclose or discover the vote or "opinion of any particular member of the Court, "unless required to give evidence thereof by a "Court of Justice or a Court Martial, in due "course of law."

For Native Officers of the Sikh Religion.

"I swear by the Guru Granth- "Sáhib jí, and if I tell a falsehood, may the Guru "Granth Sáhib jí cause misfortune to descend "upon me, that I will duly administer justice, ac- "cording to these Articles of War, without parti- "ality, favour or affection; and if any doubt shall "arise, then, according to my conscience, the best "of my understanding, and the custom of war in "the like cases; and that I will not divulge the sen- "tence of the Court until it shall be published by "authority; and, further, that I will not disclose "or discover the vote or opinion of any particular "member of the Court, unless required to give evi- "dence thereof by a Court of Justice or a Court "Martial, in due course of law."

Judge Advocate's oath.

Article 110.—The Interpreter, or any other European Officer of the Court, shall then administer to the Judge Advocate, or Superintending Officer, the following affirmation or the following oath:—

"I solemnly affirm, in the pre- "sence of Almighty God, that I will not, upon "any account whatsoever, disclose or discover the "vote or opinion of any particular member of the "Court Martial, unless required to give evidence "thereof as a witness by a Court of Justice or a "Court Martial, in due course of law; and that I "will not, unless it be necessary for the due dis- "charge of my official duties, disclose the sentence "of the Court until it shall be published by autho- "rity."

When oath is made instead of affirmation, the oath shall commence—

"I do swear that I will not, "upon any account whatsoever, disclose," &c., and shall be in all other respects in the above form, and shall end with the words "So help me God."

Oaths of Witnesses.

Article 111.—Every person giving evidence at a Court Martial shall be examined on oath, or on affirmation, where affirmation is appropriate and admissable, and shall be duly sworn or affirmed in such of the following forms as may be appropriate:—

For Europeans and persons professing the Christian religion.

"I do swear that what I "shall say shall be the truth, the whole truth,

"and nothing but the truth." So help me God—

or,

"I solemnly affirm, in the "presence of Almighty God, that what I shall "state shall be the truth, the whole truth, and "nothing but the truth."

For Sikh Witnesses.

"I swear by the Guru Granth "Sáhib jí, and if I tell a falsehood, may the Guru "Granth Sáhib jí cause misfortune to descend "upon me, that what I shall state shall be the "truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the "truth."

For Mussulman, Hindú, or other Native Witnesses.

"I solemnly affirm, in the "presence of Almighty God, that what I shall "state shall be the truth, the whole truth, and "nothing but the truth."

Oaths to be binding on conscience.

Article 112.—If none of the forms of oath or affirmation prescribed in Articles 108 to 111, both inclusive, are appropriate to any officer of a Court Martial or any witness, such officer or witness shall make oath or affirmation to the purport hereinbefore prescribed, in such form as the Court ascertains to be according to his religion or otherwise binding on his conscience.

Re-swearing in case of several trials.

Article 113.—When more trials than one are held by the same Court Martial, every Officer of the Court and every witness before the Court, shall make a fresh oath or affirmation, as hereinbefore prescribed, notwithstanding any previous oath or affirmation.

Presumptive evidence of desertion.

Article 114.—If at any trial for desertion, it is proved that the person tried has been absent without authority for the space of two months, such proof shall be deemed sufficient presumptive evidence of desertion; and the Court may thereupon convict the prisoner of desertion, unless he proves that his absence was not wilful, or otherwise rebuts the presumption of desertion arising from the proof of his unauthorized absence.

Reference by prisoner to Government Officer.

Article 115.—If at any trial for desertion, absence without leave, overstaying leave, or not rejoining when warned for service, the person tried states, in his defence, any sufficient or reasonable excuse for his unauthorized absence, and refers in support thereof to any Officer in the Civil or Military service of Government, or if it appears that any such Officer is likely to prove or disprove the said statement in the defence, the Court shall address such Officer, and adjourn until his reply is received.

The written reply of any Officer so referred to shall if signed by him be received in evidence, and have the same effect as if made on oath or affirmation before the Court.

If the Court is dissolved before the receipt of such reply, or if the Court omits to comply with the provisions of this Article, the convening Officer may, at his discretion, annul the proceedings and order a fresh trial by the same or another Court Martial.

Trial for desertion.

Article 116.—On any trial for desertion the accused may be found guilty either of desertion or of absence without leave.

Evidence of previous convictions and general character.

Article 117.—When any person subject to these Articles has been convicted by a Court Martial of any military offence, such Court Martial shall enquire into and receive and record evidence of any previous convictions of such person, either by a Court Martial, or by a Court of Justice; and shall further, in the case of any person below the rank of a Warrant-officer, enquire into and record the general character of such person.

Evidence received under this Article may be either oral, or in the shape of entries in, or certified extracts from, the Court Martial Books; and it shall not be necessary to prove the signature to such certified extract, nor shall it be necessary to give notice to the prisoner before trial that evidence as to his previous convictions or character will be received.

Voting of Members.

Article 118.—The members of a Court Martial shall preserve order; and in giving their votes upon any matter, shall begin with the junior in rank.

Except where otherwise specially provided, every decision shall be passed by a majority of votes; and where there is an equality of votes, as to either finding or sentence, the decision shall be in favour of the prisoner.

In matters other than the finding or sentence, the President shall have a casting vote.

Majority requisite to sentence of death.

Article 119—No sentence of death shall be passed by any General Court Martial, other than a General Court Martial held under an order in Council, unless such sentence is concurred in by at least two-thirds of the Officers composing the Court, or by five out of seven, or four out of five Officers, when the Court consists of either of those numbers.

A General Court Martial held under an order in Council may by the votes of a majority of such Court, pass a sentence of death.

Revision of finding or sentence.

Article 120.—The finding or sentence of any Court Martial may be revised by order of the Officer authorized to dispose of the proceedings.

But no finding or sentence of a Court Martial shall be revised more than once; nor shall any evidence, save evidence as to previous convictions or general character, be received on a revision.

The Court, on revision, shall consist of the same, and the same number of, Officers as were present when the original decision was passed, unless any such Officer or Officers shall be unavoidably absent.

In case of such unavoidable absence, the cause thereof shall be duly certified in the proceedings, and the Court shall proceed with the revision, provided it still consists of the smallest number of Officers of which such Court is by these Articles required to consist.

Procedure to be generally followed.

Article 121.—The procedure laid down in the Articles 106 to 119 (both inclusive) shall be adopted at all trials by Courts Martial save when otherwise specially ordered or provided.

Summoning witnesses.

Article 122.—The Judge-Advocate, in the case of a General Court Martial, and the Officer ordering the trial in the case of any other Court Martial may, by summons under his hand, require the attendance before the Court, at a time and place to be mentioned in the summons, of any person either to give evidence or to produce documents.

In the case of a witness amenable to military authority, the summons shall be sent to the Officer in actual command of the corps to which he belongs, and such Officer shall serve it upon him accordingly.

In the case of any other witness, the summons shall be sent to the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction he may be, or resides, and such Magistrate shall give effect to the summons as if the witness were required in the Court of such Magistrate.

When a witness is required to produce any particular document in his possession or power, the summons shall describe it with convenient certainty.

Contempts of Court.

Article 123.—Any witness duly summoned, or any other person who commits any contempt of Court in the presence of a Court Martial, or who commits any of the offences described in Articles 56, 67, or 68, shall, if subject to these Articles, be proceeded against as they direct, and shall, if not so subject, be delivered over to a Magistrate, who shall proceed against the offender in the same manner as if the offence had been committed before or towards a Court of Criminal Justice.

Privilege of witnesses.

Article 124.—Every witness, while proceeding to, attending on, or returning from, any Court Martial before which he has been summoned, shall be privileged from arrest in any civil suit or proceeding; and if arrested in any such suit or proceeding, may be discharged by order of such Court Martial.

SUMMARY COURT MARTIALS.

Persons to attend Summary Court Martial.

Article 125.—Every Summary Court Martial shall be attended by two Commissioned Officers, European or Native, exclusive of the said Commanding Officer.

An Interpreter shall, in every case, attend at a Summary Court Martial; but when no other competent Interpreter is available, the Officer holding the trial, or one of the Officers in attendance thereat, may perform the duty of Interpreter.

No Interpreter shall as such have a vote upon any matter.

Proceedings of such Courts.

Article 126.—The proceedings of every Summary Court Martial shall be conducted in presence of all the Officers specified in Article 125, and shall be recorded in the English language in the manner usual at other Courts Martial.

Oaths of Interpreter and Officer holding trial.

Article 127.—The Interpreter shall first make oath or affirmation, as provided by Article 108, down to the words "published by authority;" and the Commanding Officer holding the trial shall then make oath or affirmation, as provided in Article 109, down to the words "custom of war in the like cases."

The Officers in attendance shall not as such be sworn or affirmed.

Evidence.

Article 128.—All evidence shall be taken on oath or affirmation, as provided by Article 111.

Any previous convictions on record against the offender, and his general character, shall be recorded by the Commanding Officer, as of his own knowledge, or proved as provided by Article 117.

Signature and transmission of proceedings.

Article 129.—The proceedings in every case in which a Regimental Court Martial or a Detachment Court Martial tries an offence not within the ordinary jurisdiction of a Regimental Court Martial, committed on the line of march or on board a vessel, shall be sent for the information of the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency to which such troops belong, and of the Presidency within which they may be, or to which they are proceeding.

The proceedings of every Summary Court Martial shall, when closed, be signed by the Commanding Officer, the Interpreter and the Officers attending the trial, and shall, without delay, be forwarded to the Officer Commanding the Division or District within which the trial held; and such Officer, or the Commander-in-Chief in India, or of the Presidency in which the trial was held, is hereby authorized to set aside the trial for reasons based on the merits of the case, but not on any merely technical grounds.

When a Summary Court Martial is held in a force not attached to any Presidency, the Officer Commanding such force may exercise the powers given in this Article in regard to setting aside trials.

The proceedings of every other Court Martial shall when closed be signed by the members, and shall without delay be forwarded or delivered to the Officer under whose orders the trial has been held.

CHAPTER III.—Sentences.

(a.)—Of General Courts Martial.

Article 130.—(a). Any General Court Martial may for any offence falling under Articles 7 to 23 both inclusive and for such offences only, sentence any person subject to its jurisdiction to death; or to transportation for life, or for any period not less than seven years: or to imprisonment (with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement) for any period not exceeding fourteen years.

(b).—Any General Court Martial may, for any offence falling under Articles 54, 55, or 56 of these Articles, sentence any person as aforesaid to the penalties attached to such offences in Article 57, and may for any other disgraceful conduct award the penalties attached to that offence in Articles 136, 137, and 138.

(c).—Any General Court Martial may, in any case where no special punishments are prescribed, or, in addition to any special punishment, where so authorized, sentence any person amenable thereto to any punishment specified in Articles 131, 132, 133, 135, 137, and 138.

(d).—No Court Martial other than a General Court Martial shall have power to award a sentence of death, transportation, or imprisonment exceeding one year.

Any General Court Martial may sentence any Commissioned Officer to be dismissed the service or to be suspended from rank, pay and allowances for any stated period; or to be placed one or more steps lower in the list of his rank.

No Court Martial other than a General Court Martial shall have power to try or punish a Commissioned Officer.

(b.)—Of General, District or Garrison Courts Martial.

Article 131.—Any General, District, or Garrison Court Martial may sentence a Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Hospital Assistant, Native Doctor, or Warrant Officer to be dismissed the service; or to be suspended from rank, pay and allowances for any stated period; or to be reduced to a lower grade or class in his Department or to be placed one or more steps lower in the list of his rank.

No Court Martial inferior to a District or Garrison Court Martial shall have power to try or punish any Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Hospital Assistant, Native Doctor or Warrant Officer.

(c.)—Reduction, dismissal, corporal punishment, and imprisonment.

Article 132.—Any Court Martial may sentence a Non-Commissioned Officer to be reduced to the ranks; or to be placed one or more steps lower in the list of his rank;

Or may sentence any person subject to these Articles below the rank of Warrant Officer, to be dismissed the service; or to suffer corporal punishment not exceeding fifty lashes; or to imprisonment with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement for such periods as are hereinafter prescribed.

(d.)—Limit of Imprisonment.

Article 133.—Except in the cases provided for in Articles 24 and 57, the limit of imprisonment, whether with or without hard labour and solitary confinement awardable by Courts Martial under these Articles, shall be for General Courts Martial two years; for District or Garrison Courts Martial one year; and for Regimental or Detachment Courts Martial six months.

(e.)—Solitary Confinement.

Article 134.—No person shall, under any such sentence, or under one or more sentences, be kept in solitary confinement more than eighty-four days in one year, or more than fourteen days at one time, and there shall be, between the periods of solitary confinement, intervals of ordinary imprisonment at least equal to the period of solitary confinement.

Reduction to ranks.

Article 135.—No Non-Commissioned Officer shall be sentenced by any Court Martial to imprisonment or to corporal punishment, without being first sentenced to reduction to the ranks.

Forfeiture of pay and pension.

Article 136.—On a conviction of any disgraceful conduct, a General, District, or Garrison Court Martial may, in addition to any other punishment which it is empowered to award, sentence the offender to forfeit all advantage as to additional pay, good conduct pay, and claim to pension on discharge, which might otherwise have accrued from the length or nature of his former service; or to forfeit all such advantage absolutely, whether it has accrued from former service or may accrue from future service.

Forfeiture of arrears of pay.

Article 137.—On any conviction of disgraceful conduct, if the offender be sentenced to dismissal from the service, or if his sentence involve dismissal under Article 155 or Article 157, he shall further be sentenced to forfeit any arrears of pay and allowances, or other public money, due to him at the time of his dismissal, or such portion thereof as may be required to make good any proved loss or damage arising out of his disgraceful conduct.

Any Court Martial may, in addition to dismissal, or to any punishment involving dismissal under Article 157 sentence any person whom it is authorized to try, to forfeit any arrears of pay and allowances, or other public money, due to him at the time of his dismissal, or such portion thereof as may be required to make good any proved loss or damage arising out of his misconduct.

Stoppages.

Article 138.—Every offender convicted of disgraceful conduct whose dismissal from the service is not so awarded or involved as aforesaid, shall, in addition to any other punishment, be sentenced by the Court to be put under stoppages, to the extent provided by Article 139, until the amount of any proved loss or damage arising out of such conduct, be made good.

And any Court Martial, in addition to any punishment other than, or not involving, dismissal, may sentence any person as aforesaid to be put under stoppages, to the extent specified in Article 139, until any proved loss or damage arising out of his misconduct, be made good.

Extent of stoppages.

Article 139.—Stoppages under Article 138 shall not be awarded, whether under one or more than one sentence, to a greater extent than, in the case of an Officer, two-thirds, or in the case of any other person, one-half of his monthly pay and allowances; and shall not be so awarded as to extend beyond one year.

Any public money issued to the offender within the said period of one year, shall, for the purposes of this Article, be deemed to be pay and allowances.

Sentence of Transportation or Imprisonment on person already sentenced.

Article 140.—Whenever a sentence of transportation or imprisonment is passed by any Court Martial upon an offender already under sentence of transportation for a limited term, or of imprisonment, the Court may award transportation or imprisonment to commence on the expiration of such previous sentence; notwithstanding that the aggregate of any terms of imprisonment may thus exceed the limit of imprisonment which such Court is by these Articles of War empowered to award.

Form of sentence of death.

Article 141.—In awarding a sentence of death, a General Court Martial shall, at its discretion, direct that the offender shall "suffer death by being hanged by the neck until he be dead," or shall "suffer death by being shot to death."

CHAPTER IV.—Confirmation and Commutation of sentences.

Sentences to be confirmed or otherwise disposed of.

Article 142.—Save in the case of a Summary Court Martial, no decision or sentence of any Court Martial shall be carried into effect until confirmed or otherwise disposed of by—

(a).—The Commander-in-Chief in India: or

(b.)—In the case of any Court Martial for the trial of any person within his command, the Commander-in-Chief of a Presidency: or

(c).—In the case of any Court Martial for the trial of any person under his command, any Officer authorized in this behalf by warrant of the Commander-in-Chief in India or of any Presidency, but subject to any restrictions contained in the warrant: or

(d).—In the case of any Court Martial for the trial of any person under his command—any Officer commanding Native troops not attached to the forces of a Presidency who is authorized in this behalf by warrant of the Commander-in-Chief in India:

(e).—In the case of any Court Martial for the trial of any person under his command—any Officer in actual command of troops who is authorized in this behalf by the Governor General of India in Council, the Governor of Fort St. George in Council, or the Governor of Bombay in Council:

(f).—In the case of a Detachment General Court Martial held beyond the limits of British India, and not within the dominions of the Princes and States of India in alliance with Her Majesty—the Officer appointing such Court Martial, unless the sentence of such Court Martial exceeds that awardable by a District or Garrison Court Martial, in which case the Commander-in-Chief in India, or of the Presidency to which the offender belongs, shall alone have power to confirm, remit, commute, or annul such sentence:

(g).—In the case of a Regimental Court Martial for the trial of any person under his command—the Officer appointing such Court Martial:

(h).—In the case of a Regimental Detachment Court Martial for the trial of any person under his command, where the detachment consists of, or is equal in strength to, three troops or companies, —the Commanding Officer.

(i).—But when any such Court Martial is held in a Detachment of less than, or not equal in strength, to, three troops or companies, the sentence shall be submitted for confirmation to the Officer Commanding the prisoner's Regiment, or to the nearest superior Officer holding a command of not less than a Regiment, who is hereby empowered to dispose of such sentence in like manner as if the trial had been held by his own order:

Provided that in detached situations beyond sea, or out of British India, or on service in the field, or in cases where immediate example is necessary and reference cannot be made to such Regimental or other superior Commanding Officer without detriment to the service, the Officer Commanding any Detachment, whatever its strength, may dispose of and carry out the sentence of any Detachment Court Martial held by his order.

(j).—Any Commander-in-Chief or Officer mentioned in clauses (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h) of this section may, subject to the provisions of these Articles, and to the restrictions (if any) in the warrant (if any) by which he is authorized in this behalf, mitigate, remit, commute or annul any sentence to the execution of which his confirmation is necessary.

Sentence of death.

Article 143.—When a sentence of death has been passed by any General Court Martial, the Officer so authorized in accordance with the Articles may confirm such sentence and cause it to be carried into effect, or may, in lieu thereof, sentence the offender to transportation for life or for a term not less than seven years, or to imprisonment (with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement) for any term not exceeding fourteen years.

Sentence of penal servitude or transportation.

Article 144.—Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, whenever any person being an European or American or a legitimate lineal descendant of an European or American, is convicted of an offence punishable under these Articles with transportation, the Court shall sentence the offender to penal servitude instead of transportation, according to the provisions of Act No. XXIV of 1855.

When a sentence of transportation has been awarded by any General Court Martial, the Officer authorized in accordance with these Articles, may confirm the sentence and cause it to be carried into effect, or may, in lieu thereof, sentence the offender to imprisonment (with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement) for any term not exceeding fourteen years, and not exceeding the term of transportation awarded by the Court.

Sentence of dismissal on Commissioned Officers, &c.

Article 145.—A sentence of dismissal from the service passed by any Court Martial under these Articles of War upon a Commissioned Officer, Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Hospital Assistant, Native Doctor, or Warrant Officer, may be commuted by the Officer duly authorized to confirm or otherwise dispose of such sentence, to suspension from rank, pay and allowances for any stated period.

Any sentence on Commissioned Officers, &c.

Article 146.—Except on foreign service, or when reference cannot, without detriment to discipline, be made to superior military authority, no decision or sentence passed upon any Commissioned Officer, Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Hospital Assistant, Native Doctor, or Warrant Officer, shall be carried into effect until confirmed or otherwise disposed of by the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency to which the offender belongs, or, when such offender belongs to a force not attached to any Presidency, by the Officer Commanding the force.

Sentence of corporal punishment.

Article 147.—A sentence of corporal punishment passed by any Court Martial may be commuted, by the Officer authorized to confirm or otherwise dispose of such sentence, to dismissal from the service, or to imprisonment without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, for any period not exceeding one year, which might have been awarded by such Court Martial.

Sentence of imprisonment with hard labour.

Article 148.—A sentence of imprisonment with hard labour passed by any Court Martial may be commuted, by the Officer authorized to confirm or otherwise dispose of such sentence, to dismissal from the service, or to imprisonment without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, for the term mentioned in the sentence, or for any shorter term.

Sentence of reduction with corporal punishment or imprisonment.

Article 149.—The Officer duly authorized to confirm or otherwise dispose of the sentence of any Court Martial may, in the case of a Non-Commissioned Officer sentenced by any such Court, mitigate a sentence of reduction to the ranks followed by corporal punishment or imprisonment to reduction only, or may commute a sentence of dismissal from the service to reduction to the ranks.

Commutation of sentence of dismissal on Non-Commissioned Officers.

CHAPTER V.—Execution of Sentences.

Transportation.

Article 150.—Whenever the sentence of a General Court Martial awarding transportation is duly confirmed, or whenever a sentence of death is duly commuted to transportation, the offender shall be delivered over with a warrant of commitment, containing an authenticated copy of the sentence or commuted sentence, to the Officer in charge of the nearest jail; and such Officer shall give effect to the sentence accordingly, under such order as he may receive from the Local Government.

Imprisonment with hard labour.

Article 151.—Whenever the duly confirmed sentence of any Court Martial awards imprisonment with hard labour, or whenever the sentence of any Court Martial is duly commuted to such imprisonment, the offender shall be delivered over with a warrant of commitment, containing an authenticated copy of the said sentence or commuted sentence, to the Officer in charge of the nearest jail; and such Officer shall detain the offender, under the rules in force, in such jail according to the exigency of the warrant, or until he is discharged by due course of law.

Place of imprisonment.

Article 152.—The Commander-in-Chief in India may, as occasion requires, direct that any person sentenced under these Articles to imprisonment, shall be confined in any jail or other fit place for confinement, or may order his removal from any place of confinement under military control to any other such place, or to any jail or other fit place of confinement.

The Commander-in-Chief of a Presidency and the Officer Commanding any force not attached to any Presidency, shall have the like powers so far as regards persons under his command and jails or other places of confinement situate within the local limits of such command.

Transfer to Military custody.

Article 153.—When any person subject to these Articles is confined in any jail or other place not subject to military control, under a sentence of transportation or imprisonment, whether passed by a Court Martial or by a Court of Criminal Justice, the Government of India, or the Local Government of the Presidency or place wherein such person is confined, may order his transfer to military custody, or may order his removal from one to any other such place of confinement within the territories of such Government.

The period during which such person is in custody during his removal shall be reckoned as part of his term of transportation or imprisonment.

Forfeiture of pay during imprisonment.

Article 154.—Any person subject to these Articles of War in receipt of public pay, who is imprisoned in any place, under the sentence, or commuted sentence, of a Court Martial, or a Court of Criminal Justice, shall, during such imprisonment, if his sentence does not involve dismissal under Article 155 or Article 157, forfeit all pay and allowances, and be entitled to subsistence only, according to the rates prescribed in the regulations of the Government to which he is subject.

And any such person in confinement in any place whatsoever, whether as a punishment by his Commanding Officer, or under any charge of which he is subsequently convicted, shall, during such confinement, forfeit all pay and allowances, and be entitled to subsistence only, according to the regulations of the Government to which he is subject.

Striking Convict off strength of Regiment.

Article 155.—Every person sentenced by any Court Martial, or by any Court exercising jurisdiction in criminal cases, to transportation or imprisonment with hard labour, shall, in the case of a sentence by a Court Martial, from the date of confirmation of such sentence, and in the case of a sentence by a Criminal Court, from the date of such sentence, be struck off the strength of the regiment, corps, or department to which he belongs.

Non-re-admission of Convict.

Article 156.—No person who has undergone any such period of transportation or imprisonment with hard labour, shall be re-admitted to the service, or be entitled to any pension:

Provided that in the case of any illegal sentence duly annulled as aforesaid, or of a pardon under Article 160, such person may, by order of the Government when the offence is non-military, or by order of the Commander-in-Chief in India, or of the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency when the offence is military, be re-admitted to service, or pension, as the case may be.

Dismissal with ignominy.

Article 157.—Any person below the rank of Warrant Officer sentenced under these Articles to dismissal, or to imprisonment with hard labour, or to corporal punishment, for disgraceful conduct, shall, on the confirmation of such sentence, be dismissed with ignominy from the service.

Publication of sentence for disgraceful conduct.

Article 158.—A copy of every confirmed sentence of dismissal, imprisonment with hard labour, or corporal punishment, for disgraceful conduct, and of the orders passed thereupon, shall be sent by the Adjutant General of the Army to the Chief Civil or Political Officer of the District wherein the offender's place of residence is situated; and such Officer shall publish the sentence and orders at the said place in such manner as may there be usual.

Sentences of Summary Courts Martial.

Article 159.—Any sentence awarded by a Summary Court Martial may be carried into effec forthwith on the Commanding Officer's own authority, and all provisions contained in Articles 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 160 and 161 as to execution of sentences and disposal of prisoners, shall equally apply to persons sentenced by Summary Court Martial.

CHAPTER VI.—Pardons and Remissions.

Pardon of person convicted of military offence.

Article 160.—The Governor General of India in Council, and the Commander-in-Chief in India, as regards any person subject to these Articles who has been convicted by a Court Martial of a military offence, and the Governors of Fort St. George in Council, and of Bombay in Council, and the Commander-in-Chief of any Presidency as regards any such person within the territories subject to such Government or under the command of such Commander-in-Chief shall have power to pardon such person, and may, instead of granting a full pardon to any such person, remit wholly or in part any punishment awarded to him by a Court Martial, and may order the restoration to such person of any service or other advantage forfeited under his sentence.

Release of prisoners.

Article 161.—Any Officer in charge of a jail on receiving a notification under the hand of a Secretary to the Government of India or to the Government of Fort St. George or to the Government of Bombay, or under the hand of the Commander-in-Chief in India, or of any Presidency, or of the Officer Commanding any force not attached to a Presidency, or any Division or District, that the sentence under which any person subject to these Articles is imprisoned in such jail, has been annulled or remitted, or that any such person has been pardoned under Article 160, shall on the authority of such notification alone, immediately release the prisoner or return him to military custody.

CHAPTER VII.—Regimental Courts of Enquiry.

Article 162.—If any person subject to these Articles is, without due authority, absent from his duty for two months, a Regimental Court of Enquiry, composed of European or Native Commissioned Officers, or of both in conjunction, shall forthwith assemble, and having received proof on oath or affirmation of the unauthorized absence, shall declare the same, and the period thereof; and the Officer Commanding the Regiment or Corps shall record such declaration in the regimental books.

If the person absent does not afterwards surrender or is not apprehended, such record shall have the legal effect of a conviction of desertion.

If he surrenders or is apprehended, such record, or a copy thereof purporting to bear the signature of the Officer having the custody of the regimental books, shall, on the trial of such person for desertion, be presumptive evidence of the facts therein recorded; and on proof of the identity of the prisoner with the person therein-mentioned, he may be found guilty of desertion.

Persons absent as Prisoners of War.

Article 163.—No person subject to these Articles, shall be entitled to any pay or allowances or other public money, or to reckon service during any absence as a prisoner of war.

But when such person rejoins the service, enquiry shall be made by a Court Martial into the circumstances of his absence; and unless it is proved to the satisfaction of such Court that he was taken prisoner through his own wilful neglect of duty, or that he had served with or under or aided the enemy, or that he had not, as soon as possible, returned to the service, he may be recommended by the Court to receive either the whole or any portion of the arrears due to him, and to reckon his service.

Such recommendation duly confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency, or by the Officer Commanding any Force not attached to a Presidency to which the said person belongs, shall entitle him to receive such arrears and reckon service accordingly.

TITLE III.—POWERS OF OFFICERS INDEPENDENTLY OF TRIAL.

Reduction to ranks.

Article 164.—The Commander-in-Chief in India shall have power to reduce any Non-Commissioned Officer to the ranks.

The Commander-in-Chief of a Presidency, and the Officer Commanding any force not attached to a Presidency shall have respectively the same power as regards Non-Commissioned Officers under their respective commands.

Minor Punishments.

Article 165.—The Commander-in-Chief in India shall, under the authority of the Governor General in Council, prescribe the minor punishments to which persons subject to these Articles shall for light offences be liable, without the intervention of a Court Martial, and shall specify the Officer or Officers by whom, and the extent to which, such minor punishments may be awarded.

No such minor punishment shall be awarded by a Court Martial; and, unless otherwise specially provided by the said Commander-in-Chief, no Commissioned Officer, Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Hospital Assistant, Native Doctor, or Warrant Officer, shall be liable to any such minor punishment.

Good conduct pay shall not necessarily be forfeited on the infliction of a minor punishment, but forfeiture thereof may be awarded as a substantive punishment either by order of the Commanding Officer or by sentence of a Court Martial, as may from time to time be prescribed in the general orders of the Commander-in-Chief in India or of the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency, as the case may be.

Whenever a soldier is convicted by a Court Martial, his good conduct pay shall cease.

Forfeiture of good conduct pay may be awarded in addition to any other minor punishment.

Offences of Native followers.

Article 166.—For any offence in breach of good order, the Commanding Officer of any Regiment, Corps or Detachment, whether European or Native, in camp, or at any frontier post at which troops are stationed, and to which this Article may be specially extended by the Governor General of India in Council, the Governor of Fort St. George in Council, the Governor of Bombay in Council, or any other Local Government, may sentence any Native follower of such regiment, corps or detachment, if above the degree of a menial servant, to pay a fine not exceeding Rupees fifty, or, in default of payment, or in lieu thereof, to imprisonment for any period not exceeding thirty days; or if the Native follower be not above the degree of a menial servant, to imprisonment not exceeding seven days, or to corporal punishment not exceeding twelve strokes of a rattan.

Imprisonment awarded under this Article may be carried out in a military guard, or in a jail, as ordered by the said Commanding Officer; and the Officer in charge of any jail shall, on the delivery to him of the person of the offender, with a warrant under the hand of the said Commanding Officer, detain the offender according to the exigency of the warrant, or until he is discharged by due course of law.

Complaints against Officers.

Article 167.—Any person subject to these Articles, who deems himself wronged by any superior or other Officer, may, if not attached to a troop or company, complain to the Officer under whose command or orders he is serving; and may if attached to a troop or company, complain to the Officer Commanding the same.

When the Officer complained against is the Officer to whom any other complaint should, under this Article, be preferred, the aggrieved person shall complain to such Officer's next superior Officer.

No such complaint shall be made to any Officer other than those indicated in the former part of this Article.

Every Officer receiving any such complaint shall examine into it, and, when necessary, refer it to superior authority.

Every such complaint shall be preferred through such channels as may be from time to time prescribed by proper authority; and any person preferring a frivolous or groundless complaint shall be liable to trial by any Court Martial competent to try him, and to such punishment, other than dismissal, corporal punishment, or imprisonment with hard labour, as the Court is empowered by these Articles to award.

Provost Marshals.

Article 168.—For the prompt and instant repression of irregularities and offences committed in the field or on the line of march, Provost Marshals shall be appointed by the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency, or the Officer Commanding the forces in the field; and the powers and duties of such Provost Marshals shall be regulated according to the established custom of war and the rules of the service.

Their duties and powers.

Article 169.—The duties of a Provost Marshal so appointed are to take charge of prisoners confined for offences of a general description, to preserve good order and discipline, and to prevent breaches of the same by persons belonging or attached to the Army.

The Provost Marshal may punish, corporally, then and there, any person amenable to these Articles below the rank of Warrant Officer, who in his view, or in the view of any of his assistants, commits any breach of good order and military discipline:

Provided that such punishment shall be limited to the necessity of the case, and shall accord with the orders which the Provost Marshal may from time to time receive from the Officer Commanding the troops:

Provided also that the orders of the said Commanding Officer shall in no case authorize such corporal punishment in excess of that awardable by sentence of a Court Martial.

If the actual commission of the offence is not witnessed by the Provost Marshal, or any of his assistants, but sufficient proof can be obtained of the offender's guilt, he shall report the case to the Commander of the Troops, who shall deal with the case as he may deem most conducive to the maintenance of good order and military discipline.

TITLE V.—NON-MILITARY OFFENCES.

(a.)—Committed within jurisdiction of Criminal Court.

Article 170.—Any person subject to these Articles, who, at any place in British India within the jurisdiction of any Court of Criminal Justice established by Her Majesty, or by the Government of India, or by the Local Government, is accused of any offence against the Indian Penal Code, and not included in the foregoing Articles, shall be delivered over to the nearest Magistrate to be proceeded against according to law.

All persons in, or attached to, the Army, are hereby required upon application duly made to them for that purpose, to assist the Officers of Justice in apprehending and securing any such accused person.

Any person in, or attached to, the Army, wilfully neglecting or refusing so to assist shall be punished with any punishment, other than death or transportation, awardable under these Articles.

Offences committed out of British India.

Article 171.—In any place out of British India, offences against the Indian Penal Code, and not included in the foregoing Articles of War, shall, when committed by any person amenable to these Articles, be cognizable by a General Court Martial to be convened by any Officer who is empowered by warrant, or order in Council, or by Article 77, to appoint General Courts Martial.

General Court Martial for trial of such offences.

Article 172.—The provisions of these Articles as to the composition and procedure of General Courts Martial, shall, with the exception of those contained in Article 117, apply to General Courts Martial for the trial of non-military offences:

Provided that such General Courts Martial shall in every case be attended by a Judge Advocate.

Sentences of such Court.

Article 173.—A General Court Martial held for the trial of a non-military offence, shall, on the conviction of any offender, award punishment in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Penal Code.

Confirmation of sentences.

Article 174.—No decision or sentence passed by any such General Court Martial shall be carried into effect until confirmed or otherwise disposed of by the authority which, under these Articles, is empowered to confirm or otherwise dispose of the sentence of such General Court Martial; and no sentence of death shall be carried into effect until confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency to which the offender belongs, or when the offender is not attached to any Presidency, until confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief in India.

Commutation of sentences.

Prisoners.

Article 175.—All the provisions contained in Articles 143, 144, 148, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156 and 161, relating to the disposal of sentences and of sentenced prisoners, shall apply to persons sentenced by a General Court Martial for a non-military offence.

TITLE VI.—EFFECTS OF DECEASED MEN AND OF DESERTERS.

Article 176.—When any person subject to these Articles dies, or is killed in the field, the Officer Commanding the Regiment, Corps or Detachment, or the Officer in charge of the Department to which such person belonged, shall, if no representative in interest of such person be on the spot, secure his effects in camp or quarters, and cause an inventory thereof to be made, and a duplicate of such inventory to be lodged with the Officer Commanding, or in charge of, the Regiment, Corps, Detachment or Department to which the deceased belonged.

Sale of effects and discharge of debts.

Article 177.—If there be no representative on the spot, or readily accessible, such Officer shall, without any representation taken out, publicly sell such part of the effects of the deceased in camp or quarters as do not consist of money, and shall pay thereout the debts of the deceased in camp or quarters, the expense of his funeral ceremonies, and his regimental debts of every description; and shall pay the surplus (if any) to the representative in interest of the deceased.

Remittal of Surplus.

Article 178.—In the event of no claim for the surplus of the deceased person's estate being made and established within twelve months of his death, the amount in the hands of the Officer in charge of the estate shall be remitted to the Controller General of Accounts at Calcutta, or to the Accountant General to the Government of Fort St. George or of Bombay; or, if the deceased shall have belonged to a force not under any Presidency, to the Controller General of Accounts at Calcutta.

Sale of effects of Deserters.

Article 179.—The effects in camp or quarters of a deserter shall be publicly sold, and the proceeds, after payment thereout of all regimental or departmental claims, shall be remitted by the Officer Commanding, or in charge of, the Regiment, Corps, Detachment, or Department to which the deserter belongs, to the Controller General of Accounts at Calcutta or to the Accountant General to the Government of Fort St. George or of Bombay.

Remittal of proceeds.

If the deserter belongs to a force not attached to any Presidency, then the said proceeds shall be remitted to the Controller General of Accounts at Calcutta.

PART III.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Prohibition of Second Trial.

(a).—Persons subject to the Articles contained in Part II of this Act, who have been acquitted or convicted either by a Court Martial or by a Court of Criminal Justice, of any offence, whether military or non-military, shall not be again tried or punished for the same offence by any Court whatsoever.

But any such person may be dismissed the service.

Prohibition of Arrest for Debt.

(b).—No person enlisted or in pay as a soldier of Her Majesty's Indian Army, shall be liable to be arrested for debt under any process issued by or by the authority of any Court of Law.

The Judge of any such Court may examine into any complaint made by such soldier or his superior Officer, of the arrest of such soldier contrary to the intent of this Act, and may by warrant under his hand discharge such soldier, and shall award reasonable costs to the complainant, who may recover such costs in like manner as he might have recovered costs awarded to him by a decree against the person obtaining such process.

The arms, horse, clothes, equipments, regimental accoutrements and necessaries of any such soldier shall not be liable to be seized in satisfaction of any judgment against him or any person whom he may represent.

Breach of Cantonment Rules.

(c).—When any offence in breach of any duly authorized Cantonment rule or regulation is committed by any person not subject to the said Articles, and not an European British subject or an Officer or Soldier, the Officer Commanding the Cantonment may, in the absence of a Civil Magistrate, summon or order the apprehension of the offender; and such Officer may (after personally investigating the case) sentence the offender to pay a fine not exceeding fifty Rupees; or in default of payment of, or in lieu of, such fine, to imprisonment in any jail or military guard for a period not exceeding thirty days.

The Officer in charge of any jail shall, on the delivery to him of the person of the offender, with a warrant under the hand of the said Commanding Officer, detain the offender according to the exigency of the warrant, or until he is discharged by due course of law.

Capture of Deserters.

(d).—Whenever any person subject to the said Articles deserts, the Commanding Officer of the regiment, corps or detachment to which he belongs, shall give written information of the desertion to such Civil, Political, or Police authorities as, in his opinion, may be able to afford assistance towards the capture of the deserter; and such authorities shall thereupon take steps for the apprehension of the said deserter, in like manner as if he were a person for whose capture a warrant had been issued by a Magistrate, and shall deliver the deserter when apprehended to military custody.

Such authorities shall also, by such means as appear to them best adapted for the purpose, prevent persons reasonably suspected to be subject to the said Articles from travelling through the districts subject to their jurisdiction, unless on duty, or furnished with a certificate of leave or discharge.

Any Police officer may arrest without warrant any person so suspected, and shall bring him without delay before the nearest Magistrate, or the nearest Military Commanding Officer when no Magistrate is readily accessible, to be dealt with according to law.

Apprehension of Military Offenders.

(e.)—Whenever any person subject to the said Articles, who is accused of any military offence, is within the jurisdiction of any Civil, Political, or Police Officer, such officer shall aid in the apprehension and delivery to military custody of such person upon receipt of a written application to that effect, signed by his Commanding Officer.

Presumption as to signatures.

(f.)—In any proceeding under this Act, any application, certificate, warrant, reply or other document purporting to be signed by an officer in the civil or military service of Government shall, on production, be presumed to have been duly signed by the person and in the character by whom and in which it purports to have been signed, until the contrary is shown.

Native Troops serving out of their own Presidency.

(g.)—When any portion of the Native troops belonging to any Presidency, is serving within the limits of any other Presidency, such troops shall, during such service, for all the purposes of the said Articles, be under the authority and orders of the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency in which they are serving:

Provided that it shall be lawful for the Governor General of India in Council to direct that, for the purposes of the said Articles, Native troops serving out of their own Presidency shall continue subject to the authority and orders of the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency to which such troops belong.

Power to make Orders and issue Warrants.

(h.)—The Governor General of India in Council,

The Governors of Fort St. George and Bombay in Council,

The Commander-in-Chief in India, and

The Commanders-in-Chief of the Presidencies of Fort St. George and Bombay, may respectively make all orders and issue all warrants for holding Courts Martial or otherwise, which appear necessary for the purposes of this Act; and in the case of military offences requiring to be disposed of without delay, the Governor General of India in Council, and the Governors of Fort St. George and Bombay in Council may respectively further authorize any officer empowered by Order in Council to confirm, commute, remit or annul sentences in such cases to refer such sentences for orders to the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency.

Limitation of Powers.

(i.)—Nothing hereinbefore contained shall empower the Commander-in-Chief of a Presidency to re-admit to service or pension any person not within his command, or to authorize any officer to appoint, or to confirm, commute, remit or annul the sentences of Courts Martial for the trial of any person not within the command of such Commander-in-Chief, except in the case specified in the proviso in clause (g) of this Part, or shall empower any Government to give directions as to the composition of, or to authorize the appointment of, Courts Martial in any place for the time being subject to any other Government.

Power to make Rules.

(j).—It shall be lawful for the Governor General of India in Council from time to time to make rules consistent with this Act, for the guidance of officers, whether Military, Civil, or Political, in all matters connected with its enforcement.

All such rules shall be published in the Gazette of India, and shall thereupon be deemed to have the force of law.

Translation of Act.

(k.) This Act shall be translated into and published in, the principal vernacular languages of the several Presidencies.

The following Articles, namely, Articles 3, 4, 5, 7 to 71, both inclusive, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 125, 126, 130, 131, 132, 133, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 154, 167, and 176, shall be read once in every three months at the head of every regiment, corps, troop, or company in the service.

APPENDIX.

PART I.—DEFINITIONS IN THE INDIAN PENAL CODE.
(See PART I, CLAUSE e).

Wrongful Gain.

23. "Wrongful gain" is gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining is not legally entitled.

Wrongful loss.

"Wrongful loss" is the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled.

A person is said to gain wrongfully when such person retains wrongfully, as well as when such person acquires wrongfully. A person is said to lose wrongfully when such person is wrongfully kept out of any property, as well as when such person is wrongfully deprived of property.

Dishonestly.

24. Whoever does any thing with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing "dishonestly."

Fraudulently.

25. A person is said to do a thing fraudulently if he does that thing with intent to defraud, but not otherwise.

Reason to believe.

26 A person is said to have "reason to believe" a thing, if he has sufficient cause to believe that thing, but not otherwise.

OF HURT.

Hurt.

319. Whoever causes bodily pain, disease, or infirmity to any person is said to cause hurt.

Grievous Hurt.

320. The following kinds of hurt only are designated as "grievous."

First.—Emasculation.

Secondly.—Permanent privation of the sight of either eye.

Thirdly.—Permanent privation of the hearing of either ear.

Fourthly.—Privation of any member or joint.

Fifthly.—Destruction or permanent impairing of the powers of any member or joint.

Sixthly.—Permanent disfiguration of the head or face.

Seventhly.—Fracture or dislocation of a bone or tooth.

Eighthly.—Any hurt which endangers life, or which causes the sufferer to be, during the space of twenty days, in severe bodily pain, or unable to follow his ordinary pursuits.

Voluntarily causing hurt.

321. Whoever does any act with the intention of thereby causing hurt to any person, or with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause hurt to any person, and does thereby cause hurt to any person, is said "voluntarily to cause hurt."

Voluntarily causing grievous hurt.

322. Whoever voluntarily causes hurt, if the hurt which he intends to cause or knows himself to be likely to cause is grievous hurt, and if the hurt which he causes is grievous hurt, is said "voluntarily to cause grievous hurt."

Explanation.—A person is not said voluntarily to grievous hurt except when he both causes grievous hurt and intends or knows himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. But he is said voluntarily to cause grievous hurt if, intending or knowing himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt of one kind, he actually causes grievous hurt of another kind.

Illustration.

A, intending or knowing himself to be likely permane to disfigure Z's face, gives Z a blow which does not permanently disfigure Z's face, but which causes Z to suffer severe bodily pain for the space of twenty days. A has voluntarily caused grievous hurt.

OF CRIMINAL FORCE AND ASSAULT.

Force.

349. A person is said to use force to another if he causes motion, change of motion, or cessation of motion to that other, or if he causes to any substance such motion, or change of motion, or cessation of motion as brings that substance into contact with any part of that other's body, or with anything which that other is wearing or carrying, or with anything so situated that such contact affects that other's sense of feeling; Provided that the person causing the motion, or change of motion, or cessation of motion, causes that motion, change of motion, or cessation of motion in one of the three ways hereinafter described.

First.—By his own bodily power.

Secondly.—By disposing any substance in such a manner that the motion or change or cessation of motion takes place without any further act on his part, or on the part of any other person.

Thirdly.—By inducing any animal to move, to change its motion, or to cease to move.

Criminal Force.

350. Whoever intentionally uses force to any person, without that person's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending by the use of such force to cause, or knowing it to be likely that by the use of such force he will cause injury, fear, or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used, is said to use criminal force to that other

Illustrations.

(a). Z is sitting in a moored boat on a river. A unfastens the moorings, and thus intentionally causes the boat to drift down the stream. Here A intentionally causes motion to Z, and he does this by disposing substances in such a manner that the motion is produced without any other act on any person's part. A has therefore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done so without Z's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending or knowing it to be likely that this use of force will cause injury, fear, or annoyance to Z, A has used criminal force to Z.

(b). Z is riding in a chariot. A lashes Z's horses, and thereby causes them to quicken their pace. Here A has caused change of motion to Z by inducing the animals to change their motion, A has therefore used force to Z; and if A has done this without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy Z, A has committed criminal force to Z.

(c). Z is riding in a palanquin. A, intending to rob Z, seizes the pole and stops the palanquin Here A has caused cessation of motion to Z, and he has done this by his own bodily power. A has therefore used force to Z; and as A has acted thus intentionally without Z's consent, in order to the commission of an offence, A has used criminal force to Z.

(d). A intentionally pushes against Z in the street. Here A has by his own bodily power moved his own person so as to bring it into contact with Z. He has therefore intentionally used force to Z, and if he has done so without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy Z, he has used criminal force to Z.

(e). A throws a stone, intending or knowing it to be likely that the stone will be thus brought into contact with Z, or with Z's clothes, or with something carried by Z, or that it will strike water and dash up the water against Z's clothes or something carried by Z. Here, if the throwing of the stone produce the effect of causing any substance to come into contact with Z or Z's clothes, A has used force to Z; and if he did so without Z's consent, intending thereby to injure, frighten, or annoy Z, he has used criminal force to Z.

(f). A intentionally pulls up a woman's veil. Here A intentionally uses force to her; and he does so without her consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy her, he has used criminal force to her.

(g). Z is bathing. A pours into the bath water which he knows to be boiling. Here A intentionally, by his own bodily power, causes such motion in the boiling water as brings that water into contact with Z, or with other water so situated that such contact must affect Z's sense of feeling: A has therefore intentionally used force to Z: and if he has done this without Z's consent intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause injury, fear, or annoyance to Z, A has used criminal force.

(h). A incites a dog to spring upon Z, without Z's consent. Here, if A intends to cause injury, fear, or annoyance to Z, he uses criminal force to Z.

Assault.

351. Whoever makes any gesture or any preparation, intending or knowing it to be likely that such gesture or preparation will cause any person present to apprehend that he who makes that gesture or preparation is about to use criminal force to that person, is said to commit an assault.

Explanation.—Mere words do not amount to an assault. But the words which a person uses may give to his gestures or preparation such a meaning as may make those gestures or preparations amount to an assault.

Illustrations.

(a) A shakes his fist at Z, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause Z to believe that A is about to strike Z. A has committed an assault.

(b). A begins to unloose the muzzle of a ferocious dog, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause Z to believe that he is about to cause the dog to attack Z. A has committed an assault upon Z.

(c) A takes up a stick, saying to Z, "I will give you a beating." Here, though the words used by A could in no case amount to an assault, and though the mere gesture, unaccompanied by any other circumstances might not amount to an assault, the gesture explained by the words may amount to an assault.

OF EXTORTION.

Extortion.

383 Whoever intentionally puts any person in fear of any injury to that person or to any other, and thereby dishonestly induces the person so put in fear to deliver to any person any property or valuable security, or any thing signed or sealed which may be converted into a valuable security, commits "extortion."

Illustrations.

(a.) A threatens to publish a defamatory libel concerning Z, unless Z gives him money. He thus induces Z to give him money. A has committed extortion.

(b.) A threatens Z that he will keep Z's child in wrongful confinement, unless Z will sign and deliver to A a promissory note binding Z to pay certain monies to A. Z signs and delivers the note. A has committed extortion.

(c.) A threatens to send club-men to plough up Z's field, unless Z will sign and deliver to B a bond binding Z under a penalty to deliver certain produce to B, and thereby induces Z to sign and deliver the bond. A has committed extortion.

(d) A by putting Z in fear of grievous hurt, dishonestly induces Z to sign or affix his seal to a blank paper, and deliver it to A. Z signs and delivers the paper to A. Here, as the paper so signed may be converted into a valuable security, A has committed extortion.

II.—INDIAN PENAL CODE, CHAPTER V.—OF ABETMENT.

SECTIONS 107 AND 108.

(See Article 71).

Abetment of a thing.

107. A person abets the doing of a thing, who—

First.—Instigates any person to do that thing; or,

Secondly.—Engages with one or more other person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of that thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the doing of that thing; or,

Thirdly.—Intentionally aids, by any act or illegal omission, the doing of that thing.

Explanation 1.—A person who, by wilful misrepresentation, or by wilful concealment of a material fact which he is bound to disclose, voluntarily causes or procures, or attempts to cause or procure, a thing to be done, is said to instigate the doing of that thing.

Illustration.

A, a public officer is authorized by a warrant from a Court of Justice to apprehend Z. B, knowing that fact and also that C is not Z, wilfully represents to A that C is Z, and thereby intentionally causes A to apprehend C. Here B abets by instigation the apprehension of C.

Explanation 2.—Whoever, either prior to or at the time of the commission of an act, does any thing in order to facilitate the commission of that act, and thereby facilitates the commission thereof, is said to aid the doing of that act.

Abettor.

108. A person abets an offence who abets either the commission of an offence, or the commission of an act which would be an offence, if committed by a person capable by law of committing an offence with the same intention or knowledge as that of the abettor.

Explanation 1.—The abetment of the illegal omission of an act may amount to an offence, although the abettor may not himself be bound to do that act.

Explanation 2.—To constitute the offence of abetment, it is not necessary that the act abetted should be committed, or that the effect requisite to constitute the offence should be caused.

Illustrations.

(a.) A instigates B to murder C. B refuses to do so. A is guilty of abetting B to commit murder.

(b) A instigates B to murder D. B in pursuance of the instigation stabs D. D recovers from the wound. A is guilty of instigating B to commit murder.

Explanation 3.—It is not necessary that the person abetted should be capable by law of committing an offence, or that he should have the same guilty intention or knowledge as that of the abettor, or any guilty intention or knowledge.

Illustrations.

(a) A, with a guilty intention, abets a child or a lunatic to commit an act which would be an offence if committed by a person capable by law of committing an offence, and having the same intention as A. Here A, whether the act be committed or not, is guilty of abetting an offence.

(b.) A with the intention of murdering Z, instigates B, a child under seven years of age, to do an act which causes Z's death. B, in consequence of the abetment, does the act, and thereby causes Z's death. Here, though B was not capable by law of committing an offence, A is liable to be punished in the manner as if B had been capable by law of committing an offence, and had committed murder, and he is therefore subject to the punishment of death.

(c.) A instigates B to set fire to a dwelling-house. B, in consequence of the unsoundness of his mind, being incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law, sets fire to the house in consequence of A's instigation. B has committed no offence, but A is guilty of abetting the offence of setting fire to a dwelling-house, and is liable to the punishment provided for that offence.

(d.) A intending to cause a theft to be committed, instigates B to take property belonging to Z out of Z's possession. A induces B to believe that the property belongs to A. B takes the property out of Z's possession, in good faith, believing it to be A's property. B, acting under this misconception, does not take dishonestly, and therefore does not commit theft. But A is guilty of abetting theft, and is liable to the same punishment as if B had committed theft.

Sentences of death, where the offender is not attached to any Presidency, must be confirmed (Article 174) by the Commander-in-Chief in India.

In Part III are contained sundry miscellaneous provisions, the most important of which is a clause providing (a) that no soldier shall be arrested for debt, and (b), that no soldier's arms, horse or regimental necessaries shall be liable to be seized in satisfaction of a judgment.

Article 166 provides a punishment for offences committed by camp-followers in camp or at any frontier post, at which troops are stationed, to which the Article may be specially extended.

Article 172 provides that General Courts Martial shall be held for the trial of non-military offences, which shall on the conviction of the offender award punishment in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Penal Code.

Provision is made in Part III, clause (d), for the capture of deserters, and the civil political and police authorities are empowered to prevent persons suspected to be subject to the Articles from travelling unless on duty or furnished with a proper certificate.

Civil Officers are required by Part III, clause (e), to aid in the apprehension of persons accused of military offences.

Lastly, power is given to the Governor General in Council to make rules consistent with the proposed Act for the guidance of officers in matters connected with its enforcement.

Asst. Secy. to the Govt. of India,
Home Dept., (Legislative.)

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 4th November 1868:—

No. 30 OF 1868.

A Bill further to amend the Criminal Procedure of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces.

Preamble.

WHEREAS under Section 12 of Act No. XXIV of 1866 (to amend the procedure of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces of the Presidency of Fort William) when a European British subject is tried by jury before the said Court, the majority of the jurors shall, if he so requires before the jury is empanelled for his trial, consist of Europeans or Americans, or of both Europeans and Americans, and the procedure on such trial is regulated by the said Act:

And whereas under Section 29 of the Letters Patent for the said High Court, dated the seventeenth day of March 1866, and Section 325 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when a person not an European nor an American is tried by jury before the said Court, at least one-half the jurors, if he so desires, consists of persons not Europeans or Americans, and the procedure in such trial is regulated by the said Code;

And whereas under the circumstances herein before recited, in any case before the said High Court in which an European British subject is charged jointly with a person not an European nor an American, the persons so charged must be tried separately, and it is expedient to provide that they may be tried together and that the procedure on such trial shall be uniform:

And whereas it is also expedient to relieve the Judges of the said High Court from the duty of recording evidence in the manner prescribed by Sections 198 and 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Power to try Native together with European British subject.

1. In any case before the said High Court in which an European British subject is charged jointly with a person not being an European British subject, a jury may be empanelled for the trial of both persons so charged, and they may be tried together, and the procedure on the trial shall be the same as it would have been had the European British subject been tried separately.

In any case before the said High Court in which an European British subject is charged jointly with a person not being an European British subject, and the former, before the jury is empanelled, requires the majority of the jurors to consist of Europeans and Americans, or both Europeans and Americans, the latter person shall be tried together with the former, and the procedure on the trial shall be the same as it would have been had the former been tried separately.

Proviso.

Provided that in any such case where the person not an European British subject so requires before the said jury is empanelled, he shall be tried separately by a jury of which at least one-half shall consist of persons not being Europeans or Americans.

Suspension of sections 198 and 364 of Code of Criminal Procedure.

2. The operation of sections 198 and 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is hereby suspended in the said High Court, and in any case coming before the Court in the exercise of its ordinary or its extraordinary original criminal jurisdiction, the Judges of such Court shall take down the evidence or the substance thereof in such manner as the Court shall by any general rule from time to time direct.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

As the law stands, when an European British subject and a Native are jointly charged with an offence, and committed for trial to the High Court for the North-Western Provinces, they must be tried separately, and in each trial a different procedure is followed—the European being tried in exercise of the Court's ordinary, while the Native is tried in exercise of its extraordinary criminal jurisdiction.

This state of things having been found to cause practical inconvenience, the present Bill has been framed at the desire of the Local Government. The Bill simply enacts that such persons so charged may be tried together and by the same procedure, but gives the Native the option of refusing to be tried by a jury, the majority of which are Europeans or Americans.

The opportunity has been taken of enabling the Judges of the High Court for the North-Western Provinces, when exercising original criminal jurisdiction, to record the evidence in the same manner as the Judges of the other High Courts record it in criminal cases.

The 5th November 1868.

No. 1296.

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council has received the intelligence of the death of Her Highness the Secunder Begum, of Bhopal, G.C.S.I., with feelings of profound regret.

2. Her Highness had conducted the administration of this principality since the year 1847, when she was first appointed Regent, with ability and success until the day of her decease. In the early years of her rule, she improved the system by which the revenue of the State is collected, abolished monopolies, regulated the mint, re-organized the police, and gradually increased the public revenue, while she effectually diminished the public debt. In later times, by her support of the cause of male and female education, by her superintendence of works intended to supply her Capital with pure and wholesome water, by the construction of Serais and roads, and by other improvements, she gave convincing indications of real and abiding interest in the progress of her people and in the prosperity of her country.

3. Her relations with the representative of the British Government at her Capital had been for a long time established on a sound and satisfactory basis, and she was on terms of friendship with the Rulers of neighbouring States.

4. But it was by her firm conduct during the great mutiny that she established a more direct title to the acknowledgments of the Head of the Administration.

5. Her unswerving fidelity, her skill in the management of affairs at an important crisis, the bold front which she presented to the enemies of the British power, and the vigilance with which she watched over the preservation of Englishmen, were acknowledged by Lord Canning, in open Durbar, in terms of well-deserved praise and commendation; and the gratitude of the British Government was further evinced by a grant of territory, which its owner had justly forfeited for open rebellion, by a recognition of the right of succession according to the custom of the principality and the Mahomedan law, and by the bestowal of one of those titles which the Sovereign of Great Britain, as the fountain of honor, has instituted to reward good services performed in India either by the Natives of the country, or by the British servants of the Crown.

6. His Excellency in Council, while thus testifying to the Chiefs, to the Services, and to the People of India, the regret with which he has learnt the death of Her Highness, takes this opportunity of appealing to the example left by the late Begum as a proof that women, in Oriental nations, are fully capable of conducting public affairs with discretion and with dignity, and of thereby not diminishing but increasing the respect and honor in which they are held by their subjects. The Viceroy further expresses his earnest hope that the administration of Bhopal may be carried on by her successor, the Begum Shah Jehan, on the same sound principles as hitherto, and that the Chiefs and Rulers of other Native States will endeavour to imitate the example which the deceased has set before them, of hearty co-operation with the British authorities, of zeal and fidelity to the interests of the Paramount Power, and of that conscientious and earnest discharge of administrative functions which never fails ultimately to conduce both to the welfare of the community and to the honor and stability of the Prince.

The 5th November 1868.

No. 3477.

Read the following extracts from the rules regarding leave of absence to Covenanted Civil Servants, published in the Notification of this Department, No. 533, dated the 16th June 1868:—

Section I.—"Actual service includes the period during which an Officer is on duty, also periods spent on privilege and subsidiary leave, and periods during which an Officer not on leave may be out of employ on subsistence allowance in India."

Section III.—"One year's furlough shall be placed to the credit of each Officer for every four years of actual service."

RESOLUTION.—To the definition in Section I, the Governor General in Council is pleased to add that "actual service" includes the period spent by a Covenanted Civil Servant on leave within the limits of the late East India Company's Charter, which, under the rules in force before the 8th June 1855, was allowed to be reckoned as service and residence.

2. With reference to Sections I and III, His Excellency in Council is also pleased to rule that periods of leave granted without any pay shall be regarded as dies non, i. e., it shall neither be credited in an Officer's account as actual service, nor debited to him as furlough taken.

3. Leave on urgent private affairs taken under former rules, and which was allowed to be reckoned as service and residence, shall be considered as actual service under the new rules.

ORDERED, that the foregoing Resolution be published in the Gazette of India, and communicated to the Foreign and Home Departments; Governments of Bengal, Madras, Bombay, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab; Comptroller General of Accounts; Director General of the Post Office of India; Accountants General in Bengal, Madras, Bombay, the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and British Burmah; Deputy Accountants General in the Central Provinces, Hyderabad, and Mysore.

No. 3178.

The following letter to the address of the Officiating Accountant General, Punjab, is published for general information:—

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your endorsement No. 114, without date, and in reply to forward a copy of a letter No. 3420 of the 2nd instant, to the address of the Accountant General, North-Western Provinces, and to state that, as the Resolution No. 2703, passed in this Department on the 29th September 1868, declares that the acting allowances of the substitutes of Uncovenanted Officers absent on privilege leave are to be "paid out of the general revenues," you are wrong in supposing that the rule that privilege leave can be granted to Uncovenanted Servants "only when it is unattended with additional expense to the State" is still in force.

No. 3482.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

CHEMICAL INVESTIGATIONS OF THE CINCHONA BARKS GROWN ON THE GOVERNMENT PLANTATIONS, MADRAS.

Read the following letter from J. BROUGHTON, Esq., Quinlogist to Government, to the Acting Secretary to Government, Revenue Department, Fort St. George,—(dated 17th August 1868.)

In commencing a report on the progress of the chemical investigations of the Cinchona barks grown on the Government plantations, the slight changes that have recently taken place in their composition may be briefly discussed.

2. Although the earlier analyses I had the honor of making and communicating to Government (Proceedings, Madras Government, Revenue Department, 12th April 1867), were, from the circumstances under which they were conducted, scarcely wide enough in their scope to permit of an entirely rigid comparison, yet I have quite convinced myself that during a year the amount of alkaloid in our oldest trees has increased. This increase may, I believe, be fairly estimated at not less than an additional yield of three-quarters of a per cent. in the trunk bark of the oldest parts of the plantations of C. Succirubra.

3. The increase has not been confined to the Red Barks, but is quite perceptible in the Crown Barks. In so various and wide a range of possible yield as in that of the trees constituting a whole plantation, of which no regular crops have yet been taken, some uncertainty must always attend the estimation of averages. I therefore prefer to incur the risk of under-estimation in stating that the mean increase in the yield of the barks of C. Officinalis, during a year, has been not less than 0·7 per cent. When it is remembered that barks, whose total yield has not exceeded three-quarters of a per cent., have been of sufficient value to re-pay their collection in America and exportation to Europe, the present condition of the plantations must be considered at least as satisfactory as heretofore. Both observation and á priori considerations lead us to expect that the average yearly increase in the yield of alkaloids will take place by increments of annually diminishing value, until a limit be reached, where the destructive agencies at work balance the rate of their formation. Though this limit may probably be not far distant, I am in possession of evidence showing that it had not been reached in May last.

4. My experience of the Red Bark plantations does not lead to the conclusion that the amount of Quinine has shared in the increase observable in that of the other alkaloids. To this subject I shall subsequently return.

5. I cannot illustrate these observations better than by quoting the numbers obtained by taking the mean of two analyses performed on two separate quantities of bark, obtained by mixing in each case the trunk bark of ten trees, 5½ years old. It may be fairly considered to represent the mean quality of the trunk bark of the oldest trees in May last.

Total alkaloids	6·74	per cent.
* Total sulphates obtained, crystallized	6·06	„
Quinine	2·40	„
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine	4·34	„
Sulphate of Quinine, crystallized	2·21	„
Do. Cinchonidine, do.	3·85	„

6. Quinidine, though occasionally present in Red Bark, could not be detected in the two samples from which the above mean yield is deduced. Its practical absence was satisfactorily shown by determining the optical properties of the crystallized sulphates after that of Quinine had been carefully separated. Their specific rotatory power was found to differ extremely slightly from that of quite pure sulphate of Cinchonidine. Operating on the crystalline sulphates, the accumulated products of more than twenty analyses of barks taken from all parts of the plantations, the same means enabled me to prove that sulphate of Quinidine did not occur in greater amount than two per cent. of the sulphates of alkaloids other than Quinine. I therefore am justified in concluding that Quinidine will not be a common or abundant product of the present plantations. Cinchonine is always present in Red Bark.

7. In like manner, I beg leave to subjoin a mean of analyses of samples of the Crown Barks from trees [illegible] years old, and collected with a view to obtain numbers that would fairly represent the mean yield of the barks of C. Officinalis:—

Total Alkaloids	4·40	per cent.
Total Sulphates	3·10	„
Quinine	2·49	„
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine	1·91	„
Crystalline Sulphate of Quinine obtained... ...	2·49	„
Do. Cinchonidine do.	0·70	„

8. Repeated analyses of C. Officinalis var. Crispa have corroborated the opinion that I on a former occasion expressed concerning the value of this bark.† Experiments (which, as they concern another subject, I do not propose to detail in the present report) have indicated the cause of the discrepancy between my results obtained from this bark and those of other chemists.

9. I have already expressed my conviction of the great value of our Crown Barks. Further investigation has given no reason to alter that opinion. The Quinine which they contain yields a pure white crystalline sulphate with ease. Many specimens I have met with have been actually free from "uncrystallizable Quinine." Hence, the Quinine is frequently so pure as to yield its theoretical amount of crystallized sulphate. I have met with specimens of Crown Bark which yield upwards of five per cent. of purified alkaloid.

10. Mr. Howard (whose correspondence and assistance have been of great service to my work) has informed me that he has satisfactorily identified a subvariety of our Cinchona Officinalis with that which yielded the bark known as Amarilla del Rey. This is a sort which has long enjoyed a high reputation

* The sulphate of Cinchonine is excluded in this and subsequent analytical statements.

† Proceedings, Madras Government, Revenue Department, 26th July 1867.

among Pharmacutists and Quinine manufacturers, and its possession is a very fortunate circumstance. It appears very easy to work, and yields Quinine readily crystallizable as sulphate. In actual amount, however, it does not appear to differ essentially from its companion sub-varieties.

11. Among the Crown Barks which were grown from seeds brought by Mr. Cross are a few scattered trees which present a marked difference from the rest of their companions. The leaves are of a narrow lanceolate shape. My attention being directed to the study of those varieties whose numerical importance claimed the earliest observation, it was not till recently that I made an analysis of this variety. Surprised by the result, I took the precaution of making an analysis of the adjoining trees of Cinchona Officinalis, in order to eliminate the possible influence of peculiar conditions of soil, site, &c.

12. The percentages of the respective alkaloids stand thus:—

	Bark of Lanceolate species.	Bark of adjoining trees.
Total Alkaloids	8·0	4·48
Quinine	7·15	2·06
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine	0·85	2·42
Sulphate of Quinine obtained crystallized	7·57	Undetermined.
Do. Cinchonidine obtained crystallized ...	0·15	"

13. The specimen, therefore, was of the finest bark in our possession. I do not think I over-state when I add that in yield of Quinine, it is of the finest quantity that has ever been recorded. It possesses every characteristic constituting excellence. It yields alkaloids in such purity that the first crystallization gives sulphate of Quinine, which stands the usual tests as well as the refined salt. I would earnestly recommend that the plant be extensively propagated and as rapidly as possible. The possession of this species is a most fortunate circumstance.*

14. In former reports I have not detailed a complete analysis of the bark yielded by the branches of the C. Succirubra. The numbers given below are the result of an examination instituted in order to determine the mean yield of that bark, care being taken to collect it from a sufficient number of trees in order to avoid the influence of individual peculiarities. It was taken from the oldest trees.

	Bark of branches 3½ years old.	Bark of branches 2½ years old.
Total Alkaloids	4·31 per cent.	1·91 per cent.
Total Crystalline Sulphates obtained	2·43 "	1·42 "
Quinine	2·00 "	0·77 "
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine	2·31 "	1·14 "
Sulphates of Quinine obtained crystallized	1·21 "	0·63 "
Do. Cinchonidine	1·53 "	0·89 "

The branch bark is thus of considerable value even when young. Much of the crystalline and other preparations of the alkaloids that I have had the honor of submitting for medical trial have been the produce of branch bark. Twig bark, though bitter to the taste, is practically useless as a source of alkaloids.

* It is not improbable that the species may be the C. Pitayensis, whose excellence it possesses. Mr. Batcock is taking home a large collection of specimens of Cinchonæ, and among them this important species will be doubtless satisfactorily indentified and named by competent botanists.

15. I have had opportunities of examining bark of C. Succirubra grown on the Government plantations in Coorg, and also some from Wynaad.

16. For the Coorg bark I was indebted to the Reverend J. Richter. It was from the trunk of trees three years and nine months old. The bark was thinner than that grown on the Neilgherries. The analyses were made at seasons of the year that I have since had reason to believe are not favorable to the produce of alkaloids.

	Received in July.	Received in October.
Total Alkaloids	5·00	4·10
Quinine	0·81	0·86
Cinchonidine, &c.	2·15	3·24
Cinchonine	2·70
Total Sulphate of Quinine obtained crystallized ...	0·70	Undetermined.
Total crystallized Sulphate	Undetermined.	3·58

17. The Wynaad bark was grown on the upper limits of a bamboo jungle, and at an elevation that, I am informed by Dr. Bidie, does not probably exceed 2,400 feet. The trees from which it was taken were nearly four years old, and had a height of eight feet and girth of trunk ten inches. The bark was thinner than that of Neilgherry growth, but was of good appearance. It yielded as follows:—

	Percentage.
Total Alkaloids	4·14
Quinine	0·6
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine	3·5
Total Sulphates obtained crystallized	3·4
Sulphate of Quinine obtained crystallized	0·5
Do. Cinchonidine obtained crystallized	2·9

18. The above analyses accord with some I shall subsequently adduce in showing that Quinine is formed in much less quantities at low elevations. They cannot, however, be considered unsatisfactory, since they contain a large amount of alkaloids, which recent trial has shown to equal Quinine in febrifuge effect. The circumstance that these medicines, so important to a planter, can be obtained from a plant requiring no more care than its near relation to the coffee tree, should require no comment.

19. Frequent analyses made of the Red Barks during the last eighteen months have clearly shown that the yield of alkaloids varies according to the season of the year. The ratio that the amount of Quinine bears to the other alkaloids appears also to vary. Periodic analyses were begun fourteen months since for the purpose of ascertaining the times of maximum and minimum yield; but at least a year more must elapse before I obtain sufficient data to decide this important subject. I may, however, state that the point of maximum yield falls within the period comprised between the beginning of February and the end of May.

20. I have been able to demonstrate that the wood of Cinchona Succirubra contains an appreciable amount of alkaloid. I have also succeeded in preparing a small specimen of pure crystallized sulphate of Quinine from the wood. Hitherto, the heart wood has been found the richest in alkaloids, the amount varying from 0·08 to 0·11 per cent. of the weight of the dry wood. The external layers of the wood of the trunk and of that of the older branches also contain alkaloid, but (as far as I am at present aware) in less amount. With the large yield obtainable from our barks, I am not of opinion that the alkaloid in the wood can be remuneratively extracted, although the gross amount contained in the wood of a whole plantation must be very considerable. Wood is an unmanageable material to work with, since, in order to extract the contained bases, it is necessary that it should be in a state of fine division. It is, however, not impossible that further research may modify this opinion. The fact of the existence of Quinine in the wood is an interesting one.

21. Attention has been paid to the influence of elevation (and consequently of climate) on the occurrence of the alkaloids in Cinchona barks. I have been able to obtain specimens of the bark of C. Succirubra grown at the heights varying from 2,300 feet to 7,700 feet above the sea level. The specimens were in each case taken from several trees which were as nearly of an age that circumstances would permit. The heights were measured barometrically. The analyses were made during the months of August and September—a season which I have since found to be an unfavorable one for obtaining a good yield. I do not, however, think that this circumstance would affect the comparative value of the results, which are as follows :—

	OOTACAMUND.			NEDDIVUTTUM.
	I	II	III	IV	V	VI	VII
	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.
Red Barks	7,770*	7,660*	7,450	6,560	5,450	3,500	2,300
Total Alkaloids ...	2·38	2·03	4·21	5·75	3·8	4·10	4·1
Quinine	0·45	0·33	0·70	2·50	1·2	0·86	0·6
Cinchonidine & Cinchonin	1·93	1·70	3 51	3·25	2·6	3·24	3·5
Crystalline Sulphates obtained	1·75	1·60	3·20	4·20	3·1	3·58	3·4

22. The assertion so frequently made that the higher the elevation the greater the yield of alkaloids, is untrue. The Red Bark trees growing at the higher elevations are, as Mr. McIvor has already pointed out, stunted and unhealthy in appearance. The analyses marked * which are necessarily made from the bark of single trees, show that they are also comparatively deficient in yield. The bark from the lower portions of the Neddivuttum plantations is inferior to the upper parts, both in the amount of total alkaloids which they contain, in the readiness with which they are obtained in a pure state, and in amount of Quinine. The whole of my experience leads to the conclusion that a high mean temperature is adverse to the yield of Quinine, but not to that of Cinchonidine. The elevation of 6,000 to 7,000 feet appears to be that most favorable to the yield of Quinine, though the appearance of the increase of Quinine per saltum in analysis IV. is fortuitous. The elevation of the sites of the greater part of the plantations appears to me to have been selected with prescient judgment. Extension should, however, be in an upward direction rather than downward.

23. Similar observations have been made with the Crown Barks, though the difficulty in obtaining mean specimens growing under conditions differing only in altitude has limited the enquiry.

	I	II	III	IV
Crown Barks	8,000	7,770	6,007	5,450
Total Alkaloids	3·42	3·61	3·10	2·68
Quinine	2·10	1·83	0·75	0·45
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine	1·32	1 78	2·35	2·23
Crystalline Sulphates obtained	3·20	3 30	2·60	1·80

24. From the foregoing analyses, combined with others that have been made with different intentions, I conclude that the Crown Barks grown at the higher elevations of the Dodabet plantation surpass those grown at the less altitude of Neddivutum in their yield of Quinine. The trees planted at the lowest slopes of the latter yield barks which are also inferior in other respects, since they contain resinous and coloring matters which increase the labor of purifying the alkaloids. The cortical fibres are also more numerous in the low grown Crown Barks. I have also detected Quinidine in these barks. The Quinine is in great part re-placed by Cinchonidine, exactly as in low grown Red Barks.

25. While suitable soil can be obtained at altitudes over 7,000 feet, it does not appear to be advisable to plant Crown Barks at lower elevations. Even though the advantage be not great, it is worth securing.

26. It is worthy of remark that, among the numerous analyses that have been made of Red Barks grown in climates whose mean temperature has ranged from that of Northern Italy to that of African Tunis, I have not met with a sample that did not give a more or less satisfactory yield of febrifuge alkaloids, or in which Quinine was not present. The same has been true of the Crown Barks within the narrower limits that have permitted observations of that species.

27. The bark of trees that have been subjected to the mossing treatment introduced by Mr. McIvor, has been so abundantly examined by Mr. Howard from specimens supplied at intervals for that purpose, that repetition by myself of the experiments on the same limited scale appears almost supererogatory. The following analyses may be adduced as quite corroborating former ones:—

	No. 1, Bark of C. Succirubra, 16 months under moss.	No. 2, Bark of the trees renewed under moss 16 months.
Total Alkaloids	10 72	8·22
Quinine	4·31	5·14
Cinchonine and Cinchonidine	6·41	3·08
Total Sulphates obtained crystallized	9·27	4·67
Sulphate of Quinine	4·02	3·87
Do. Cinchonidine	5·25	0·80

28. The barks yield by mossing a greatly increased amount of alkaloid, and in a state which permits them to crystalize with facility as sulphates. The bark No. II., renewed under moss was thinner than natural bark, and lost more weight on drying. It should be remembered, however, that the renewed bark was sixteen, while the natural bark was sixty-six, months old. This specimen was remarkable for the large amount of Cinchonine it contained. Had the sulphate of this base been reckoned among the total sulphates, their amount would have been upwards of six per cent. As already remarked by Mr. Howard, freshly-renewed bark contains a considerable amount of uncrystallizable Quinine. I have continually observed this peculiarity of young bark whether it be obtained from young trees directly or produced by "renewal" on older trees. It would seem that it is as uncrystallizable Quinine that the alkaloids are first formed by the natural processes in the plant. Thus, from the 3·23 per cent. of Quinine found in some young red bark two and a half years old, but 1·97 of sulphate of Quinine was obtainable crystallized; while in some bark sixteen months old, but one-fifth of the Quinine found, would give a crystalline sulphate.

29. The process of mossing the bark appears to require trial on a scale in which the increase both of bark and alkaloid could be systematically determined, and the cost compared with other methods of cropping the bark, such as coppicing, &c. These points are obviously necessary to an estimation of the practical value of the method, and at present are only guessed at. The repeated treatment of single trees and analyses of the bark after so many concurrent experiments, seems comparatively useless labor, while there exist so many other questions of a chemical nature to be settled. Unless, therefore, Government are pleased to direct otherwise, I shall only give the subject that attention which its actual practical working demands, or that its connection with the histological chemistry of the plant may require.

30. The cause of the increased yield of alkaloids obtained by mossing the bark has been adverted to in a former report (Proceedings, Madras Government, Revenue Department, 12th April 1867, paragraphs 15—18), when I had the honor of pointing out the injurious effect that continued exposure to sunshine has on Cinchona alkaloids and bark. The greater part of the effect produced by surrounding the living bark with a layer of moss must be ascribed to the circumstance that it is kept in darkness.

31. The bark of two trees, after a sample had been analysed, was covered in one tree with a shield of tinned plate, and in the other with black cloth. The object was to keep the bark in darkness, while access of air was not impeded. The result of subsequent analyses were as follows:—

	Tree covered with Tinned Plate.		Tree covered with Black Cloth.
	Original bark.	Bark after 10 months' protection.	Original bark.	Bark after 6 months' protection.	Bark after 10 months' protection.
Total Alkaloids ...	5·29	8·10	5·04	6·91	7·92
Quinine	2·16	1·65	2·26	2·03	2·34
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine ...	3 13	6·45	2·78	4·88	5·58

32. The foregoing experiments agree in showing that deprivation of sunshine has had the effect of increasing the amount of alkaloid in the bark. The alkaloid was obtained crystallized with nearly the same readiness as in mossed bark. The amount of Quinine has not, however, been increased as in the case of mossing. This is a circumstance which I did not expect, and it is opposed to deductions from other experiments. It is however a fact, and will doubtless be explained by increased knowledge of the subject.

33. There thus exists a strong array of concurrent evidence pointing to the conclusion that it is to the destructive effect of insolation being prevented that the richness in yield of the mossed bark must be ascribed. The facts may be recapitulated thus:—

1*st*.—The experiments of Pasteur, Leverköhn, and others, who have found that the crystallizable alkaloids become colored and uncrystallizable by exposure to sunshine.

2*nd*.—That the solutions and salts of the alkaloids become partially decomposed when sealed up in vacuo, and exposed to the Neilgherry sunshine.

3*rd*.—The inferior and comparatively impure yield of bark that has been exposed to continued insolation.

4*th*.—The marked increase in yield obtained by keeping the living bark in darkness.

34. The renewal of the bark is not a consequence of the covering with moss, though the protection afforded by the latter doubtless facilitates the regrowth. The circumstance that bark carefully taken from the tree without injury to the cambium (the layer of living cells between the bark and wood) will be speedily replaced without any external treatment, thrust itself into my notice. I observed that strips of bark, which I periodically removed from the same tree in order, by analysis, to study the changes therein taking place, always rapidly grew again, not from the edges of the wound, but from the cambium, exactly as in the renewal under moss. I have since observed that wide strips of bark are replaced by the tree when the conditions of season and health of the tree have been suitable, otherwise the re-growth failed. It will be perceived that this circumstance, by permitting systematic observation of the actual living tissues under all their stages of growth, will furnish an important means of attacking the various questions connected with the formation of alkaloids. The following analyses of the naturally renewed bark are consequently of great interest:—

C. Succirubra.

	First Series.		Second Series.
	I Original bark.	I*a* Renewed bark 6 months old.	II Original bark.	II*a* Renewed bark 10 months old.
Total Alkaloids	5·4	5·3	5·27	5·03
Quinine	1·7	4·4	1·81	4·02
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine ...	3·7	0·9	3·46	1·01
Crystallized Sulphate of Quinine...	1·75	1·56	1·78	2·20
Do. Cinchonidine	Undetermined.	Traces only.	Undetermined.	Traces only.

35. From the above, it appears that the alkaloid of re-forming bark is mainly Quinine, although that of the original bark it replaces in great part Cinchonidine. Much of the Quinine is in the uncrystallizable state, though it is evident from the above that the property of forming crystalline sulphates increases by age. Analogy renders it highly probable that eventually the whole will be susceptible of crystallization. The absence of Cinchonidine is remarkable, the sulphate obtained at once standing the ether test (the amount of sulphate of Cinchonidine obtainable from the original bark was unfortunately undetermined, but it may safely be affirmed to have exceeded 2·5 per cent.). Microscopic observation of bark No. I*a* showed that the organization was very low, the liber fibres being few and imperfect, while No. II*a* showed that during four months its organization had so advanced that the liber had the appearance of ordinary bark one and a half years old. I have not yet been able to make an analysis of the bark of the second renewal which forms when the first has been removed.

36. The above facts corroborate the statement concerning the practice of the American Cascarilleros of partially stripping the bark of a branch, and allowing it to grow again, which I had the honor of quoting on a former occasion.

37. The fifth year of the life of the Red Bark trees is marked by a great increase in the number of the liber fibres of the bark, by which that portion becomes thoroughly developed. There appears to be some grounds for the conclusion that this development is not favorable to the yield of Quinine. The opinion of authorities as to the principal seat of Quinine in the bark has been divided. Weddell, Wigand, Schleiden, and others have concluded on theoretical grounds that the liber is the part of the bark in which the alkaloids are situated. Howard, on the contrary, by direct trial, has satisfied himself that the main seat of the alkaloids is in the cellular portions of the bark which are external to the liber. Having far greater facilities for determining the question than any other chemist has hitherto possessed, I repeated the experiment that Mr. Howard had made, using, instead of the dried South American bark, the bark of C. Succirubra fresh from the tree. The liber was separated from the external cellular portion, and the two portions were then submitted to analysis. The analyses were made at a season favorable to the yield of alkaloids.

	First Series.		Second Series.
	Liber.	Cellular portion.	Liber.	Cellular portion.
Total Alkaloids	5·94	7 98	6·85	8·00
Quinine	0·7	2·25	0·85	3·25
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine ...	5·24	5·74	6·00	4·75
Sulphate of Quinine	Undetermined	Undetermined	0·9	2·8
Do. Cinchonidine ..	Do.	Do.	4 1	4·2

38. A similar experiment was made with bark five and a half years old that had been under moss for seventeen months.

	Liber.	Cellular portion.
Total Alkaloids	9·80	11·83
Quinine	2·89	5·49
Cinchonidine and Cinchonine	6·91	6·34
Crystallized Sulphate of Quinine obtained ...	2·44	5·1
Do. do. Cinchonidine obtained	4·74	4·84

39. The whole of the above trials corroborate those of Mr. Howard in showing that the external cellular part of the bark is markedly the richest in Quinine, and (to a less extent) richer in total alkaloids. When the bark becomes older, and the liber more woody, it is probable that these qualities will be still more apparent. It is remarkable that mossing, which increases the yield of Quinine, also has a tendency to thicken the cellular or less organized portion of the bark. The freshly-renewed barks which, as shown above, contain principally Quinine, consist nearly entirely of cellular tissue. Hence, existing evidence is adverse to allowing the bark to obtain an age when liber would be formed at a greater rate than the cellular tissues of the bark.

40. Attention has been called to the green coloring matter of the leaves of the Cinchona Succirubra as possessing properties well worthy of investigation. Its ethereal solution possesses a lovely green tint with a superb crimson florescence. I have therefore examined its optical properties by means of the spectroscope. I find that its absorption spectrum does not differ from that of the coloring matter of many other leaves, and like them consists of two dark bands. The perfect coincidence is readily proved by the superposition of the two absorption spectra. The results of very extensive researches made by so many English and foreign chemists and physicists on the green principle of leaves, can be also applied to that obtained from the leaves of this species of Cinchona.

41. It is a fact that, in the Cinchona barks of South India (considered as a whole), the replacement of Quinine by Cinchonidine obtains to a greater proportion of the total yield of alkaloids than in those of South America. The actual amount of the substitution varies greatly in single trees, both according to its variety and the conditions to which it is exposed. The practical effect of this peculiarity is compensated for by the large total yield of the alkaloids. For medicinal purposes, it appears, from the recent medical trials, that it is of little importance which of the two alkaloids are produced. Nevertheless, the causes which produce the replacement are obviously of the greatest interest in connection with Cinchona cultivation. There must be several proximate causes, and it will, I think, be evident from the foregoing experimental results, that they are in progress of being elicited. Thus it appears that a low mean temperature within certain limits is favourable to the production of Quinine, as is also the loose cellular structure of the bark produced by artificial means. To these must be added a circumstance that I have long observed, more especially among the varieties of C. Officinalis, that trees which are from their position fully exposed to sunshine have a proportionally larger amount of Cinchonidine than those grown in shade.

42. Mr. Howard, to whom I communicated this observation, informed me that it quite agrees with his experience. The yield of Quinine in the Ceylon Crown Barks was greater in those grown in shade than in those fully exposed. Dr. DeVrij has observed the same peculiarity.

43. The same fact harmonises with the opinion prevailing in South America that the bark of Uritusinga varies in quality according to the aspect of its situation with respect to the sun. If it be the heat of the sunshine that produces these effects, it will be seen that exposed bark would in many respects be under the same conditions as that grown in a warmer climate. The sunshine, which is powerless to warm the dry and diathermanous air of the Neilgherries, falling on the bark at once raises its temperature.

44. These observations derive additional force from the consideration that, it is in this respect of effective heat-giving sunshine that the climate of the mountain ranges of South India differs from that of the Cinchona regions of South America. With the same annual mean atmospheric temperature, the climate of the Neilgherries differs from that of the bark regions in having six months of unclouded sunshine, when the singular dryness of the atmosphere robs the rays of none of their heating power. The bark countries of the Andes are unlike ours, situated in a region of perpetual trade winds, which (as our monsoons) bring their abundant rains and fogs during the greater part of the year to interrupt the sunshine. The travels of Markham, Karsten, Spruce, Boussingault, and many others bear full testimony to this.

45. Experience of the cultivation of the Cinchonæ has convincingly shown that they cannot be successfully grown under the shade of other trees. As the plantations increase in age, the trees will shade their own bark. This consideration, taken in connection with the preceding, suggests an experiment that I would gladly see tried. It is that of planting a rood of ground closely enough, so that the bark from its early years may be thus shaded. An examination of the bark on a considerable scale would then elucidate a point which, though supported by the preponderance of existing evidence, cannot be considered at present conclusive.

46. Ammonia has been present in every specimen of Indian bark that I have examined. The hypothesis has been propounded that this substance (which is itself really an alkaloid) is a step in the formation of Quinine, &c., and is (so to speak) the frame-work of their constitution. The idea of an essential connection between ammonia and the vegetable alkaloids dates from the early part of the century, and advance of knowledge has but increased its probability. As far as I am aware, the action of ammoniacal manures (so largely employed in European agriculture) has never been systematically studied when applied to the alkaloid-producing plants, although the idea of supplying the elements required in the elaboration of these peculiar products is a plausible one. I would suggest that small plots of the two leading varieties of Cinchonæ in our possession be each manured with guano in one case, and in the other with common sulphate of ammonia, such as is sold in Europe for agricultural purposes, commencing when the plants are a year old. This is an experiment in cultivation that must be tried sooner or later, since the question of the action of manures is one that obviously suggests itself. The chemical study of the effect, even if it be a negative one, will be of great interest.

47. I have made many experiments on the changes produced on the barks by the various modes of drying, and have arrived at results of interest and practical importance. The subject, however, will not be complete for some time, and would only suffer if reported on by instalments. In like manner, there are several theoretical conclusions that might be inductively drawn from the foregoing portions of this report; but as further practical confirmation must occur in the course of subsequent work, I reserve them for another occasion.

48. There are other characteristic constituents of Cinchona bark which require a full investigation. These are Cinchotannic Acid, Quinovin, and Cinchona red. These substances have doubtless intimate relations with the formation of the alkaloids, and many even possess uses and properties of their own, both medicinal and technological. The quantity in which they are produced is very great. But while so many points of direct importance occupy my time, I have not thought it right to devote attention to subjects which might possibly yield results of scientific value only.

No. 2453, dated 22nd September 1868.

ORDER THEREON BY GOVERNMENT FORT ST. GEORGE.

The foregoing report from the Government Quinologist upon the progress of his various experiments and researches will be forwarded for the information of the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State. Copies will be furnished to the Governments of India and of the other Presidencies, to the Governments of Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Batavia, and the French Settlements in India.

2. The result of the analyses of the Crown Barks is highly satisfactory. The further experiments made with the Crispa variety tend to show that Mr. Broughton's views as to its value are correct.

3. The propagation of the valuable variety, referred to in paragraphs 11, 12, and 13 of the report, should be carefully carried out by the Superintendent of the Cinchona Plantations.

4. The same officer's attention will also be drawn to the remarks contained in paragraphs 22 and 25 as to the proper elevation at which to cultivate the Red Barks and the Crown Barks, and he will arrange for making the experiments proposed in paragraphs 45 and 46.

5. Instructions will be issued on the subject referred to in paragraph 29 on receipt of the Superintendent's reply to the General Order, under date 25th August 1868, No. 2252, which should be submitted without delay. The Government understand Mr. Broughton to desire that the mossing process may be adopted on a larger scale than has hitherto been done, in order to give full effect to his experiments.

PUBLIC WORKS BUDGET GRANT FOR 1869-70

Read the following papers :—

Public Works Department Resolution to Financial Department, No. 707, dated 23rd September 1868.

Financial Department Resolution No. 2837, dated 7th October 1868.

RESOLUTION.—The Governor General in Council having had under consideration the demands of the several Local Governments and Administrations for funds for the prosecution of public works during the year 1869-70, has decided that the public works grant for the ensuing year, excluding the probable outlay on State and Guaranteed Railways, which will be separately provided for, shall be fixed at 800 lakhs, being 89 lakhs more than the grant for the current year, the amount to be apportioned thus :—

	1869-70.	1868-69.	Increase in grant for 1869-70.

2. The further distribution of the grant, as compared with the provincial estimates, will be as follows :—

Military Works.

3. The sketch estimates of requirements of the several Local Governments and Administrations under this head amount to 317¼ lakhs, exclusive of the charges debitable to the Bombay Special Fund. Considering, however, the large* proportion of the Military grants of the last three years which has lapsed, and having regard to the urgent and increasing demands for other services, the Governor General in Council is not disposed to give a larger grant for Military works for 1869-70 than that allowed for the current year, namely, 224 lakhs. This does not include provision for works chargeable to the Bombay Special Fund, or for the value of stores to be received from England. Should, however, it be found possible to spend during 1869-70 more money on Mititary works than has now been allotted, the Governor General in Council will be prepared to take into consideration any representation on a moderate scale that may be submitted to that effect, if made when the year is sufficiently advanced to allow of an opinion being formed of the progress of the outlay generally. The amount granted is distributed as follows :—

4. The demands of the several Local Governments and Administrations under this head for 1869-70 aggregate 307½ lakhs, but the Governor General in Council considers that this is very much more than can be profitably spent during the year, and has accordingly reduced the amount to 200 lakhs, which is 60 lakhs more than was allowed for expenditure on works of this class during the current year. The distribution of the grant, as compared with the provincial estimates, and the grant for the current year, is as follows:—

5. In order to prevent misconception, it may be explained that the grant for Extraordinary Works is intended to provide for all works debitable to loan under the provisions of Public Works Department Circular No. 94 of 1867, including a proportional share of the cost of establishment and tools and plant employed on such works.

6. The grant under "Ordinary" provides for all irrigation works debitable to revenue, including embankments in Bengal and British Burmah, and State outlay on guaranteed and aided irrigation works, as also for the maintenance of agricultural works generally.

7. Special care should be taken that in the preparation of the Budget Estimate for 1869-70, a fair proportion of the charges for establishment and tools and plant is provided for from the grant for Extraordinary Irrigation Works. This was not done in all cases in the Budget Estimates for the current year, and it is therefore considered desirable that the attention of the several Local Governments and Administrations concerned should be directed to this point.

Other Services.

8. The addition of 26 lakhs to the grant for other services has been made with special reference to the large expenditure involved in the construction of jails and other civil buildings required for the proper administration of the country, as also for the construction and maintenance of roads.

9. On a careful consideration of wants of the several Local Governments and Administrations, the Governor General in Council has distributed the extra grant of 26 lakhs, as shown in the following Table, which also shows the distribution of the total grant for other services for the year 1869-70, as compared with that of the current year. It may be noted that this grant is not intended to provide for the value of stores to be supplied from England :—

10. The grant assigned to Madras includes, on the conditions specified in Public Works Department letter No. 701 C., dated 24th September 1867, a special provision of three lakhs for the line of road between Madras and Cuttack. In like manner the allotment to the Central Provinces comprises a grant, exclusive of establishment, but inclusive of that for tools and plant, of seven lakhs for the Upper Godavery works. These two sums must be considered inalienable allotments available only for the special purposes for which they have been given.

11. Connected with this matter is the question of funds for the construction of Post Office and Telegraph Department works, on which point representations have been received from the heads of these departments, to the effect that grants for such works have heretofore not been sufficiently provided for in the Public Works Budget Estimate. To avoid similar complaints in future, the Governor General in Council desires that such of the works entered in the accompanying Schedule of Telegraph works as are likely to be sanctioned during the year, may be provided for in the Provincial Public Works Budget Estimates concerned, and that as regards Post Office Department works, the Post Office authorities should be consulted as to their demands for next year, and Budget provision made for them accordingly. It is to be understood that the grants made by the Government of India are conditional on a reasonable provision being made for the demands of these branches of the service.

Bombay Special Fund Works.

12. The grant assigned for this head of service, including State outlay on Railways for 1867-68, amounts to 47 lakhs as per margin. For next year a sum of 50 lakhs is sanctioned, which is exclusive of the value of stores to be received from England. It is left to the Government of Bombay to distribute the sum granted according to the necessities of the case; but it must be borne in mind that the amount allowed is intended to provide for State outlay on Railways debitable to the special fund. If there is likely to be no charge on this account, then the whole amount of the grant may be appropriated to the construction of public works.

13. The Table attached to this Resolution shows the total grant assigned to each Presidency and Province agreeing with the foregoing figures. The Budget Estimates should now be framed accordingly, the following usual conditions being observed :—

I.—That the grant assigned to each Presidency or Province for Military works must be considered to be fixed so far that it is not available for increasing the other grants, although, if the share assigned to any Province be not required in full, it may be reduced, a corresponding reduction being made in the total of the Budget Estimate of that Province.

II.—That in like manner the grant assigned for Agricultural works classed under the heading "Extraordinary," as defined in paragraph 5 of this Resolution, is not to be diverted from that purpose; but there is no objection to its being increased, if thought proper, from the amount allotted for "Ordinary Agricultural works."

III.—That the grant assigned for "Ordinary Agricultural works," as defined in paragraph 6 of this Resolution, is only available for the specific object for which it has been given and for "Extraordinary Agricultural works."

IV.—That the sum assigned for other services will be allotted by each Local Government and Administration, according to the requirements under each head, to Civil Buildings, Communications, Miscellaneous Public Improvement, Repairs to Works (not Military and Agricultural), State outlay on Railways not guaranteed, Tools and Plant and Establishment, excepting that portion chargeable under the heading Extraordinary Agricultural works.

V.—That the grant assigned to Bombay for Special Fund Works is only available for works properly debitable to that Fund.

VI.—The Budget Estimate should be prepared to represent expenditure on Public Works in India, and in this sense should exclude the value of stores to be received from England. But a memorandum should be attached to the estimate to show, under the prescribed heads of service, the value of stores expected to be received in 1869-70.

VII.—That the grant for State expenditure on Guaranteed Railways as also outlay on State Railways, with exception of the portion debitable to special fund, will be in addition to the allotments now assigned, the estimate for each Local Government and Administration being framed as usual on the actual requirements of the year. Attention should be specially given to the various recent orders requiring that this part of the estimate may be considered carefully and made as precise and definite as possible.

14. In conclusion, the Governor General in Council requests that Local Governments and Administrations will submit their Public Works Budget Estimates in proper form and with complete punctuality. Special attention should be paid to the preparation of the estimate of Public Works Revenue, and care should be taken to see that due allowance is made therein for the interest on the capital and profits of the several Government Public Works Workshops, as also for value of stores expected to be received from England for Foreign States, local funds, and manufacturing establishments.

Circular No. 90, dated 24th October 1868.

ORDER.—Ordered, that the foregoing Resolution be forwarded to the several Local Governments and Administrations noted in the margin for information and guidance, and to the Financial and Foreign Departments for information.

Governments of Madras, Bombay, Bengal, North-Western Provinces, and Punjab; Chief Commissioners, Central Provinces, British Burmah, and Oudh; Resident at Hydrabad; Agents, Governor General, Rajpootana and Central India, and Commissioner of Coorg.

ABSTRACT of the Grants assigned for expenditure from Imperial Funds for expenditure on Public Works for 1869-70, as compared with 1868-69, excluding ordinary State expenditure on Guaranteed Railways and expenditure on State Railways.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.

OPERATIONS OF THE PAPER CURRENCY DEPARTMENT SINCE ITS COMMENCEMENT.

From Lieutenant Colonel H. HYDE, R.E., Head Commissioner of Paper Currency, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Financial Department,—No. 326, dated 1st September 1868.

In accordance with the intention conveyed in the last paragraph of my letter, No. 212, dated 13th July 1868, I have now the honor to submit a retrospective report of the operations of the Currency Department since its commencement.

Origin.

2. On the 3rd March 1860, the Right Hon'ble James Wilson first announced the intention of a Paper Currency. On the 22nd September 1860, the draft bill was read a second time.

Currency Act.

3. On the 16th July 1861, the Currency Act (XIX of 1861), revived by the Hon'ble Mr. Laing, passed the Legislative Council.

Currency Commissioners.

4. Under this Act, the Governor General in Council nominated the Masters of the three Presidency Mints to the offices of Commissioners, and the Banks of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay were made the Offices of Agency for transacting Note exchange business with the public. The agreements, however, with the Banks were not completed till within two months of the date of opening the Currency Offices, viz., 1st March 1862.

5. The novelty of the work that was thus imposed upon the Mint Masters of the three Presidency towns, whose avocations and previous training in no way fitted them for starting a Paper Currency, caused them much anxiety. They were first obliged to study the subject, and then to exercise unremitting care in the working of the scheme; and what made this still more difficult was the short notice given for commencing operations. In Calcutta, where the magnitude of the transactions was most seriously felt, it became necessary in this short period to get ready about half a million of pieces of Notes, valued at three crores of rupees, for commencing operations with, to weigh over that amount in coins, to prepare a signature seal, to stamp the requisite number of Notes, to organise an establishment, and open new forms of account.

Opening day, 1st March 1862.

6. But notwithstanding all difficulties, the Commissioners were able on the 1st of March 1862 to deliver over to the Banks the sums noted below, and to receive coin from them in lieu to the same extent:—

Calcutta	Rs. 2,30,00,000
Madras	„ 30,00,000
Bombay	„ 1,50,00,000
	4,10,00,000

New Circles.

7. The Act had only come into operation two years, when it became desirable to open a new branch office of issue, and to follow it, by opening others one after another, at the places and at the times mentioned below, viz.:—

Allahabad	1st May 1864.
Lahore	1st August 1864.
Nagpore
Calicut	1st January 1865.
Trichinopoly
Vizagapatam
Kurrachee	1st June 1865.

Messrs. Gordon and Sterndale.

8. In order to open two of the first three of these circles, the Head Commissioner had to call to Calcutta the Assistant Commissioners, appointed to those offices, and to instruct them verbally in the nature of the entirely novel duties required of them, to organise their establishment, to lay down rules for carrying on their duties, to draw up and furnish forms of account, and to supply them with a stock of Notes to commence their issues. For opening out the next three circles, the Head Commissioner was directed to proceed to Madras to personally confer with the Commissioner of Paper Currency, Madras, and to establish rules for the guidance of the Assistant Commissioners to be appointed to these offices, in modification of those drawn up for the previous three circles, to suit these latter, where the Treasurers at the time of opening and the Assistant Commissioners afterwards were also Treasury Officers.

Circulation.

9. The accompanying Statement No. I shows the Note circulation from the commencement down to March 1868 of each circle of issue. These circles have, it will be seen, jointly put into circulation throughout India the following amounts, which exhibit a progressive increase every year, and show the development of the Currency Note circulation :—

Average of	1862-63	...	...	...	Rs. 4,41,94,285
„	1863-64	...	...	...	„ 5,23,25,000
„	1864-65	...	...	...	„ 6,88,20,116
„	1865-66	...	...	...	„ 7,72,57,983
„	1866-67	...	...	...	„ 8,98,93,179
„	1867-68	...	...	...	„ 9,28,50,848

Of the Presidency circles, the greatest development is in that of Bombay, where the circulation has risen from Rs. 1,58,28,571 in the first year to Rs. 4,73,94,992 in the last of the years above cited, and this was apparently in a great measure owing to the unsatisfactory position of many of the local Banks and mercantile Companies, since collapsed, which led to the withdrawal of deposits in them and their investment in Notes. In the Calcutta Circle the circulation has gradually increased from Rs. 2,42,30,000 to Rs. 2,93,11,382. In Madras the circulation for the first year was Rs. 41,35,714, and rose in the following year to Rs. 66,50,000, since which period there is exhibited a gradual decline down to Rs. 54,79,493 in 1867-68, though it is capable of large expansion, as its circulation in September 1863 had reached a maximum of Rs. 75,00,000.

10. Of the branch circles, those at Allahabad and Lahore have put most Notes into circulation, and since the subordination of the Nagpore Circle in 1867-68 to Bombay, this circle has rapidly increased its Note circulation, so also has Kurrachee, which started only three years ago, in a country where the public scarcely understood what a Note was, or how it was a representative of coin. But as in the Madras Circle itself, so in the Madras Sub-Circles, which are placed under charge of the Deputy Collectors of Calicut, Trichinopoly, and Vizagapatam, progress has been small; the circulation in the last circle appearing to be declining. But by deducting the balance of Notes held in the Government Treasuries, it will be found that the Notes actually in the hands of the public show a marked increase within the last year.

Reserves.

11. Against the Notes issued, the Currency Department has held in deposit silver coin, silver bullion, gold in sovereigns or bullion, and lastly Government Securities. The accompanying Statement No. II exhibits the proportion of the several kinds of reserve held at the end of each month during the whole period under review.

Diagrams Nos. III and IV.

12. The facts and figures given in Statements Nos. I and II have been marked off in the accompanying diagrams (Nos. III and IV). The former of these shows at a glance the relative extent of the Note circulation of each circle from the same datum line, and the latter, the separate circulation of each circle, overlapping each other and rising to one accumulated whole, thereby exhibiting the total circulation throughout India, together with the kinds and extent of the reserves by which that circulation is protected.

Silver Bullion Reserve.

13. The reserve at the first starting, it will be seen, consisted of only silver coin, but in the month following, silver bullion was taken as a reserve, agreeably to Section IX, Clause 2 of the Currency Act. By this section, silver bullion could be offered by the public in exchange for Notes; and as all bullion had to be taken to the Mints for assay valuation, it became necessary to make the assay certificates payable at sight. At the time of the commencement of operations under the Currency Act, and for two years after, the silver bullion imported into Calcutta and Bombay was at its highest point, and as the Mints could not coin as fast as they received the bullion (it requires twenty days to manufacture bullion into coin), Government had to pay assay certificates at the rate of 4 or 5 lakhs a day for 20 days running, or nearly one crore of rupees at each Mint, and the currency coin had therefore to be exchanged for bullion undergoing coinage. Much anxiety, but no fear, was felt on this score, and observing in the month of August 1863 that the bullion at Bombay was accumulating fast beyond the power of the Mint to coin, the Bombay Currency Commissioner was ordered to remit about 40 lakhs to the Calcutta Mint for coinage, and the Bombay Currency Office was replenished with coin remitted from Madras.

Minimum Coin Reserve.

14. At Calcutta the coin reserve was on one occasion reduced to a minimum, on the 19th January 1866, of Rs. 7,91,951, against a Note circulation of Rs. 2,81,99,490, but on the following day, the Mint commenced to replenish the reserve with freshly minted money amounting to Rs. 4,54,000, and continued to deliver coin daily to that extent and more, until the coin reserve rose to a safer figure. Earlier in Bombay, finding that the bullion was accumulating inconveniently, a portion of it was remitted to Calcutta as already stated; but on a subsequent occasion, in December 1865, before any such arrangement could be carried out, the deposits of bullion for coin were so large and rapid, and the withdrawals of coin so great, that the coin reserve at Bombay was reduced by the 28th of that month to Rs. 5,33,717 only against a Note circulation of about Rs. 2,60,00,000, the bullion being Rs. 51,70,000, there being besides 15½ lakhs in sovereigns on hand, when "fortunately," says the Assistant Commissioner, "for the credit of the Department, the demand for coin ceased, and December closed with a silver coin reserve replenished by the Mint of Rs. 15,83,717."

Act I of 1866.

15. To avoid the recurrence of like withdrawals of coin, it was deemed prudent to modify Clause 2, Section IX of the Currency Act, and to return to the old Mint practice by passing Act I of 1866 on the 5th January 1866, which empowered the Commissioners to issue assay certificates, not at sight, but after such an interval of days as may be deemed necessary. The Mint has not yet had recourse to this provision of the Act, as the silver bullion importations have since fallen off, and the coin reserves have not again fallen so low as to jeopardize the credit of the Department. Assay certificates therefore continue to be issued at sight.

Circle Notes.

16. The coin reserves of the Presidency towns are reduced in amount by having to meet payment of Notes of their respective branch circles, agreeably to the Currency Act. Notes issued from Allahabad in the north-west of India, from Lahore, and until very recently, in its central city, Nagpore, were readily convertible at Calcutta; those issued at Calicut traverse eastward through the Peninsula to Madras, and those issued at Kurrachee cross the Indian Ocean, and are readily cashed at Bombay. The advantages to the commercial community are great, and trade is considerably benefited by these arrangements, for the Circle Notes are taken up as first class bills for remittance. To such an extent are they availed of, that upwards of one crore of these Notes are now held at the Presidency towns, and the coin reserves therefore reduced in these offices to that extent.

17. Finding that the trade of Nagpore with Bombay was greater than with Calcutta, it was deemed expedient by Government to subordinate Nagpore to Bombay by severing it from Calcutta; and on the 19th June 1867, Act XXX of 1867 was passed empowering the Governor General of India in Council to do so under notification in the Gazette of India, and from that date the trade of Bombay and Nagpore benefited by the arrangement.

18. The Sub-Circle Notes that accumulate at the Presidency offices are again taken up for remittance back either by the public or by the Presidency Accountants General, but more so by the latter officers, who have found them readily available for economically replenishing with money the Treasuries at the circle offices.

19. An additional advantage has also latterly been conceded by Government in letter dated 5th March 1868, to the public by allowing the circle offices to cash Notes of their head offices to the extent of their own Notes held by them.

Treasury dealings with Notes.

20. Currency Notes being a legal tender within certain circles, Treasury Officers were early instructed, in Government notification No. 43, dated 19th March 1862, to receive them in payment of all Government demands, but not to pay them back against the wish of the recipients, so that the public might not get alarmed by viewing it as an attempt to force the Notes into circulation. This was a very prudent measure, and the Treasury records show how very plentifully Notes were received from the public and voluntarily received back by them. Notes of other circles are cashed for the convenience of travellers at all Treasuries, and the railway authorities were directed, in Government letter dated 4th August 1865, to receive all Circle Notes indiscriminately in payment of railway passenger fares. Subsequently, in Government notification No. 243, dated 14th January 1867, all Treasury Officers were directed to cash and exchange for the public Currency Notes to any extent, so far as their cash balances would permit. This last measure has made the Notes more popular in the country beyond the Presidency and chief towns, where alone they were previously convertible into coin, and the effect of this popularity has already commenced to tell favorably on the circulation of the Currency Notes.

Description of Notes.

21. Soon after the Notes were issued, it was considered by Government that they were too simply designed to prevent forgery; a few attempts had been made; many officials stated that the Notes were not understood or liked by the mass of the people, as the value on them was (by some mistake made prior to the appointment of the Commissioners) represented only in English, Bengalee, and Persian. This defect was pointed out to Government, and designs were submitted for a universal form of Note having the numerical value expressed in the eight principal vernacular characters of the districts where the Notes can be used. This suggestion met only partly with the approval of Government, and new pattern Notes, separate for each Presidency, were prepared and supplied, which being colored and elaborately designed, are preferred to the old pattern Notes by all classes, by whom they are understood, excepting only the very illiterate, for whose use the lowest denomination is too high in value.

Forgery.

22. As noticed in the last paragraph, the simplicity of the design of the Notes induced forgery, and within four months after their first issue at Bombay, several attempts were made to forge Notes; in the first attempts the forgers altered Notes of Rs. 10 into Notes of higher value; they next attempted to lithograph Notes, but failed in passing them off, as they could not manage to put the water-mark on the paper; they then tried the water-mark itself, by passing a brush dipped in acid in a waving direction on paper previous to lithographing their value on them; these were easily detected at the Currency Offices, and lastly, they obtained water-marked paper (manufactured for judicial purposes) and forged Notes thereon. The simplicity of the Note design doubtless induced attempts at forgery, but that very simplicity rendered every attempt futile, for the high style of execution could never be approached in the slightest degree by any forger in this country, so that there never was for an instant the slightest difficulty in detecting a forged Note at a glance. Further, the small amount of printing in the Note left the water-marked paper, the main safeguard, free for inspection. Up to date no loss has been sustained by the receipt of an undetected forged Note at any of the Currency Offices, though some of the Banks have suffered in receiving forged Notes of the last description, which must have been through great carelessness. The new pattern Notes being very elaborately designed and printed in colors actually present no greater difficulties to the forger, though they apparently do so by the intricacy of the pattern, and though there have as yet been no attempts to copy them, I think that when once the attempt is made, it will be much more successful than with the old Notes, because it is actually easier to attain a given amount of excellence in the new design than in the old one.

Security Reserve.

23. The Currency Act of 1861 provided for the investment of not more than 4 crores of rupees in Government Securities to pay expenses, and as a means of profit, as that sum was considered to be the maximum amount that would be in circulation with the public. Agreeably, therefore, with the provisions of the Act, it was but a few months after the commencement of work that about 43 lakhs of rupees were invested in Government Securities. The accompanying Statement No. V shows the times when investments have been made or reduced, and the amounts thereof. It also shows the coin and other reserves held at the time the investments were made or reduced, together with the percentages thereof on the circulation. It will be seen by reference to it that, commencing with the first investment of Rs. 40,00,779 in April 1862, they were from time to time increased, until by the month of May 1865, they reached nearly the maximum allowed by the law of 4 crores, the exact sum being Rs. 3,98,01,961. The coin reserve at the time bore a proportion of only 32·5 per cent. on the Note circulation, which was below the limit of one-third considered necessary and safe by Mr. Wilson. The maximum investment continued to be held, until in December 1865 the crisis noted in paragraph 14 occurred, when the coin reserve at Bombay was reduced to only Rs. 5,33,717, and in the following month at Calcutta to Rs. 7,91,951; the proportion of coin to Notes in circulation in India on the 30th December 1865 and 6th January 1866 being reduced to 23·0 and 21·7 per cent. respectively. It was then considered prudent by Government (for it does not rest with the Head Commissioner either to propose or advise Government regarding investments) to increase the coin reserve by selling off a portion of the Securities, and these have consequently been reduced, until by March 1867, they were brought down to Rs. 3,25,20,547. But during this period the Note circulation has increased; consequently the coin reserve has become larger, and the proportion risen from 46·2 to 59·9 per cent. on Notes in circulation.

24. In July of this year, the Note circulation stands at Rs. 10,08,48,130 with a coin reserve of Rs. 5,61,73,961, or 55·7 per cent., being Rs. 2,35,57,918 beyond the limit of one-third considered safe by Mr. Wilson, and acted upon by the Bank of England. But if the investment be increased by the sum of Rs. 2,35,57,918, it will reach Rs. 5,61,22,873, or beyond the maximum of 4 crores allowed by law. Now, it has to be noted that the limit of 4 crores was fixed at a time when it was thought unsafe,* with the state of information then before Government, to assume a larger circulation for the Government Paper Currency Notes than that allowed by the charters granted to the Presidency Banks of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay (to be issued by those Banks), viz., Rs. 5,00,00,000, or a larger investment in Securities, allowed by the same charters than Rs. 3,75,00,000. The actual issues of the Banks at the time, however, did not exceed Rs. 3,31,70,000,† whereas the issues of the Government Currency Notes have, as already stated, reached Rs. 10,08,48,130, and still show an upward tendency, and it therefore appears that the time, which was then foreseen by Mr. Laing, has come for consideration as to whether it has become necessary to amend the Currency Act so as to allow of larger investments in Government Securities, or, at least, to invest to the full amount allowed by the law.

Lost Notes.

25. Carrying out the pledge given by Government in Mr. Wilson's speech, that even upon the relict of a Note, showing only the set of letters and numbers, the liability of Government to pay would not cease, payment has been made for all half Notes, the corresponding halves of which were lost, and this soon after the establishment of the Currency Department; for claim after claim was made, and has never ceased to be made, for half Notes, chiefly lost in transit by post. The readiness with which Government met the claims of the public for lost half Notes naturally led them to expect compensation for all lost entire Notes, and a claim was early made for a loss of Notes experienced by the foundering of a steamer in the Indian Ocean. Government, however, was not prepared at the time to admit such claims, and it was consequently refused in letter dated 12th December 1862, but afterwards, the cyclone of 1864 occurred, and a similar claim was made for recovery of value of Notes lost by the foundering of a steamer in the Bay of Bengal. Reference had to be made to know the practice of the Bank of England, and upon that practice rules were passed on the 30th July 1866, whereby losers of Notes are most liberally dealt with by Government, payment being made on certain conditions and indemnities. The consideration of every case of loss is, under these rules, left to the Head Commissioner and to the Commissioners of Madras and Bombay, and forms no small portion of the work of this Department.

26. Down to March last, 735 cases have already been disposed of by the Head Commissioner, and authority given for the payment of Rs. 1,38,220, representing the value of lost half or entire Notes. More than 50 per cent. of these Notes were lost in transit by post, and I have annexed an analysis of all the losses through the post reported to this Office, and those at Allahabad and Lahore, which shows that the greater portion are lost to or from the Calcutta Office. It is evident that the readiness with which money is obtained for lost half Notes has induced carelessness on the part of the public, not only in sending them by post without registration, but also in the actual custody of Notes about their persons and dwellings.

27. Annexed is an abstract return No. IX of cases of Notes reported lost. The heads under which these losses are classified show the way in which the losses have occurred, the details of some of which, as given below, are rather curious. For instance, one applicant submitted a ball of pulp stating it represented certain Notes left in the pocket of his trousers which were sent to the wash. Eaten by a goat; eaten by rats; eaten by white-ants; eaten by mice; eaten by cockroaches; eaten by a baby—have all been given as causes of loss. Destroyed by fire; destroyed by being kept with coin; torn by a servant; torn by a dog; torn by a child; accidentally taken to light a cigar; lost from pockets while out walking; mislaid; left on a table; supposed to be paid away by mistake, are also represented as circumstances attending loss.

One applicant, having stated that he had lost a certain number of Notes, went to the office after two days, saying they were all right, when on investigation, it was found that he sent them by post, and to prevent their loss, he stopped the Notes immediately after posting his letter, and withdrew the notice on learning that the Notes had safely reached their destination. Another presented a half Note, and demanded half the value of the same.

28. There is reason to believe that power to proclaim Notes as lost is sometimes unfairly resorted to, and many suspicious applications have been made, among which the following may be noted:—

A man paid a Note to his servant as wages, and after the payment had a dispute with the man; he demanded back the Note but was refused, whereon he reported the Note as lost, and the servant who held the Note was obliged to give an explanation to get the Note removed from the Lost Note List. There is also reason to believe that many Notes are placed in the list as lost, by mistake or too hurriedly, and that when the error is found out, no trouble is taken to remove them from the list, and therefore they remain in it erroneously until cancelled.

29. There is carelessness shown by the public in paying away and receiving Notes in course of business, so much so that I am of opinion that the great facilities afforded for paying lost Notes have been productive of evil, and that the best security to the public is to circulate Notes under the same conditions as coin, as far as ownership goes. The present practice was based on the Bank of England procedure which does not seem suited to this country, and rests on orders issued by Government. It has many faults, difficulties, and anomalies, and I have, after consulting the Legal Adviser of Government, drawn out a code of rules (now in the press) for Government sanction and for the guidance of all Currency Officers. Considering the variety of circumstances under which losses occur, it is satisfactory to know, bearing in mind the magnitude of the transactions, that the Department has been so worked that Government has up to date been protected from any loss by litigation of counter claims for lost Notes, from fraudulent claims made for Notes falsely stated to be lost, or in any other way whatever.

Banks' Agency.

30. By the agreements with the Banks for carrying on exchange transactions with the public, already alluded to (paragraph 4), they were paid a commission of $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. upon the amount of Notes put into circulation. This did not meet with the approval of the Secretary of State; the Bank of Bengal was thereon induced to cancel its agreement, and the Currency Department at Calcutta opened an Exchange Office on the 1st of January 1866. At Madras and Bombay the Exchange Offices were opened on the 1st March 1867, when, by effluxion of time, the agreements with the Banks had ceased. The amount paid to the Banks for their Agency commission has been Rs. 23,06,776-13-2.

31. The accompanying Statement No. VI, in which the cost chargeable to the Exchange Department in Calcutta during the year 1866-67 has been carefully separated, shows that these charges bore a proportion of only ·0723512 per cent. on the average Note circulation of the year, or less than one-tenth the rate (·75 per cent.) paid to the Banks. Hence, nine-tenths of the amount paid as commission to the Banks, or the sum of Rs. 20,76,099, has been the price paid to them in excess of what it would have cost, had Government, on starting the Currency Department, undertaken the duty of transacting exchange operations direct with the public.

Exchange Offices.

32. Great exertions had to be made for opening out the Exchange Offices at Calcutta, for only about two or three weeks' intimation of the intention of Government to do so was given to the Head Commissioner. The establishment necessary to work it had to be organized, forms of account had to be got up, rules for guidance of the officers to be prepared, an office to be opened in a small room in the Mint Warder's house for want of better accommodation, and the public, as they flocked into it in large numbers, had to be judiciously treated, as the Bank had for a few days previous ceased to accommodate them. Notwithstanding all these drawbacks, by keeping the men to their posts, and personally looking after them, no irregularity occurred, and the difficulty was tided over without any loss by over-payment or other causes. Rooms were then asked for and provided in the Treasury buildings for the Exchange Office; even these were found insufficient, and a house had to be engaged which was also found not adapted for a Currency Office, until Government opportunely bought the premises known as the Agra Bank, where the Currency, Exchange, and Issue Departments are now properly located.

33. The Office is freely resorted to by all classes, and has ample accommodation for the public without creating a crowd. The counter at which the public exchange Notes is generally well attended; and, recently, in casually watching the payment made for some Notes, I found that with a crowd of applicants, a man transacted his business in 8 minutes. This is a great improvement on the practice of the late Exchange Department of the Bank of Bengal as reported by a casual observer, Colonel Haughton (see Appendix I. of the Currency Commissioner's Report) when, after pressing through a crowd, he managed to effect change for his Notes after the lapse of fully three quarters of an hour.

34. The registers of the Department show that so many as 359 cases have been disposed of in a single day, and that the maximum receipt of Notes for exchange has involved a sum of upwards of ten lakhs of rupees.

35. An Enquiry Book has recently been opened in this office for gathering statistical and other information, such as can only be obtained from the public in their dealings with the Exchange Department, and which will be of great value to the office.

36. In Bombay, similar difficulty was experienced for want of a good building and accommodation, until Government engaged the premises of the late Commercial Bank. At Madras, for want of a good centrical site, the Exchange Office was opened at the Mint, which is far too distant from the business part of the town to be of much use to the public, and apparently partly accounts for the slow progress in the Madras Note circulation already noticed.

Receipts and issues of Notes.

37. The accompanying Statement No. VII shows the work done in each of the Currency Offices from the beginning. It will be seen, by reference to it, that the work is increasing in every office. In Calcutta, where the dealings with the public have assumed the largest proportions, the Notes issued last year were 16,31,335 pieces, and those exchanged were 15,15,938 pieces, representing in value Rs. 41,90,03,590
The aggregate issues of all the circles were 73,34,881 pieces, „ 86,84,95,820 and receipts 57,87,364 pieces, „ 75,56,35,420

Making a total of Rs. 1,62,41,31,240

Considering the magnitude of the transactions with the public, it is satisfactory to know that no one instance of loss has occurred from the erroneous receipt or issue of Notes. This total exemption from loss appears to be due to the system organized for carrying on transactions—a system that is based upon simplicity of work, associated with freedom from too much formality and too many checks, and which was devised after carefully considering other systems in practice.

Cancellation of Notes.

38. All Notes withdrawn from circulation are cancelled, and the cancelled Notes are kept in deposit in the Currency Head Offices for the sake of references. Registers are kept in every Currency Office in which the existence of each Note is recorded, i. e., the [illegible] on which it becomes a legal Note and the date on which it is cancelled [illegible] ceases to be such. The importance of keeping these registers is very great [illegible] and highly-paid officers have to check the entries made in them of the cancellation of each Note. This is absolutely necessary to protect Government from any fraudulent claim for a Note stated to be entirely lost; for, if not lost, the register must some time or other show when that Note is cancelled; if cancelled previous to the time of the fraudulent claim, the fraud is immediately detected; if afterwards, when in process of time that Note is cashed and cancelled, the indemnity taken from the fraudulent loser for the payment of the Note, reported lost, protects Government from loss.

39. In Statement No. VII will also be seen the number of Notes cancelled in each Currency Office, and all Notes of a branch circle are, after cancellation at the branch office, sent to their respective Head Offices for deposit. The Department is now at work over six years, and the number of Notes cancelled at the Head Offices are in—

Calcutta	...	...	...	11,83,853 pieces.
Madras ...	...	...	...	2,62,780 „
Bombay	...	...	...	10,47,725 „

The practice of the Bank of England is to destroy cancelled Notes after they have been in deposit ten years. Here no time has yet been determined upon regarding them.

Profits.

40. The account of the receipts and disbursements of the Paper Currency Department for the past official year not having yet been completed by the Comptroller General of Accounts from the returns of the different Governments, the financial results can be correctly given only down to the year 1866-67, and the accompanying Statement No. VIII of receipts and expenses of the Department of Issue of Paper Currency is accordingly prepared down to that year. It shows that the receipts and disbursements have been as follows, viz.:—

and that the net result is a profit of Rs. 23,40,171-13-2. Out of the expenditure of Rs. 31,36,096-8-5, it must be borne in mind that Rs. 23,06,776-13-2 have been paid to the Banks of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay as commission for undertaking exchange transactions with the public. In the absence of the closed accounts of the year 1867-68, the receipts of that year may fairly be estimated at not less than Rs. 10,50,000 more than the expenditure, which sum, added to the net profits, Rs. 23,40,171, shown above, would exhibit a profit derived from the Department of Issue of Paper Currency, after paying for all expenses, of about Rs. 34,00,000 in six years, and would have been Rs. 20,76,099 more had Government taken the exchange transactions under their direct control from the beginning.

41. The receipts and expenditure of each office is separately shown in the Statement No. VIII, and it will be found that every office has worked with a profit, except the Branch Offices of Calicut, Trichinopoly, and Vizagapatam, but even these, it is believed, have in the course of last year covered their expenditure.

The Public.

42. The information that reaches this office shows that the public generally have no knowledge of the status of a Currency Note as a legal tender and a true representative of coin. Every obstacle is also put in the way towards their free use by the exactions of the Native shroffs in the mofussil in effecting change for them, since the Paper Currency seriously affects their trade. Their opposition can only be rendered nugatory by properly instructing the public and giving the utmost facilities for exchange and encashment.

Government officials.

43. Many Treasury Officers seem not clearly to understand what the status of a Government Currency Note is, and constant references are made to this office showing want of information. It is intended therefore to compile a Hand Book of the Currency Department, giving all information regarding Currency Notes, and when it is completed and the rules regarding lost Notes previously alluded to are approved and printed for circulation, Treasury Officers and the public will have before them readily available information regarding the Government Currency Notes, which will remove many difficulties.

Concluding observations.

44. In reviewing the operations of the Currency Department for the past six years, it must be pointed out that Government Notes were first issued through the agency of the Presidency Banks as follows:—

Through Bank of Bengal till 31st December 1865.
" Madras } " 28th February 1867.
" Bombay }

That prior to these dates, as the Banks drew ¾ per cent. on all Notes in their hands, the maximum allowable portion of their cash balances must have been held in Notes, which gave a fictitious rise to the amount, then nominally in circulation. The greatest obstacle to the circulation of Notes outside the Presidency towns is the opposition of Bankers, European and Native, for this there appears to be no remedy; but on the contrary, as any scheme tending to establish a general exchangeable currency for the benefit of the people must interfere with the exchange profits of Bankers, opposition is to be looked for, exactly in proportion as the scheme is effective. It therefore appears to have been very wisely determined by Government not to trust to Bank Agency, but to issue Notes through State Offices.

45. Since the Government have issued their own Notes direct, notwithstanding the above noted affecting cause, there has been a steady increase in the circulation, which, though necessarily very slow, is proportionally sure, and shows that Notes are being better understood and are gaining confidence with the public. The increasing wealth of the people, the facilities afforded by railways and education will all assist; but it is evident that where the people are practical and think for themselves, as in the Punjab, the Paper Currency will be soonest understood and accepted; and, I think, that so soon as it is observed that a Paper Currency is appreciated by the masses, Government should supply Notes of value small enough to be used by them which a 10-Rupee Note is not.
